

Why Not Have a Piano?

Three excellent Pianos of sufficiently different characteristics and variety of sizes and styles to meet all demands upon them, yet all alike in being remarkable Pianos at their prices.

THE ESTEY,
THE JANSSEN,
THE NEWTON.

All guaranteed and are sold on easy terms; pianos of unimpeachable character, of which any home may be proud, and prices within your reach. The small cash payment makes it unnecessary to wait; you enjoy the music, the children progress with their music lessons, while you save up to pay for it; to defer purchase means the money that would buy a piano may be frittered away for passing pleasures that are of no lasting value.

Start the Piano Fund Today.

Five square pianos; all good ones, $25 to $75. Buy one of them and exchange it for a better one later.
Two fine modern, up-to-date, five octave Estey Organs at $50 and $60 respectively; worth $100.

Call and get posted; get a copy of "Old Time Songs"; they are free. Write if you cannot call.

A useful and handsome HOLIDAY PRESENT would be a fine Piano Stool or Chair, a Velour or Damask Piano Scarf, or a Music Leaf Turner.

It is legal and proper for a small farmer to put his premises and keep hunters off, but illegal and improper for a large landowner to do the same thing?—[Randolph Herald.]

The question according to the Vermont constitution hinges on the word "inclosed." These big tracts of timber lands are probably not "inclosed" within the intent of the constitution.

Today the man who deserves public censure gets it through the newspapers and the reputation thus given him is known at every fireside in the land.—[St. Albans Messenger.]

Cocksure? Now imagine, for instance, what would happen if the mayor of a small city got drunk, made a disturbance, was arrested and paid a fine. What would happen? The case is purely imaginary, you know.

The grafter is condemned on every hand, as he ought to be, but morally, is the tax dodger any different from the grafter? The man who conceals his property so that he may not bear his share of the public burdens is just as much of a parasite on the body politic as the grafter. The only difference is that he is wealthier, and sometimes more respected.

With more than 20 cases of diphtheria reported to the health officer in Brattleboro within three weeks we are facing a situation which demands extreme precaution. Fortunately the cases thus far have been in a mild form, with but a single death, but no assurance can be given as to the form of the disease at any time in the future. Good work is being done in the way of watching out and quickly confining suspicious cases, but the quarantine arrangements can undoubtedly be strengthened. In coping with epidemics of diphtheria in some of the large cities people who have been sick have not been given their freedom until, after convalescence, cultures have been taken twice from their throats, and twice returned with negative results, good physicians holding that a person may have recovered from diphtheria while still retaining in the throat germs with which he may transmit the disease. Wouldn't it be good policy to go the limit with our quarantining right here and now?

Medical officers of both army and navy are intensely interested in the experiments in nutrition now being conducted at Yale University. A detachment of hospital corps men, under an assistant surgeon of the army, is aiding in these tests, and the young men who are subjects of an economical diet, which is a part of this theory, are in good condition, and there is nothing to indicate a loss of strength or vigor. They take part in athletic sports, and are having, in general, a good time, although, necessarily, they are under some restrictions, and are still amenable to military authority. Surgeon General O'Reilly, of the army, says that so far as the experiments have gone they indicate that the theory of a reduced amount of food is fully sustained. It has been found that instead of twenty-five ounces of food, health and vitality can be maintained on nine ounces a day. A full demonstration of this will have an important effect on the subsistence departments of the army and navy, to say nothing, says Gen. O'Reilly, of the advantage it would be to the world at large.

It is proposed that the army medical department shall make a complete investigation, and it will probably take a year or more before the experts are able to state anything positively.

The heavy fall in Pennsylvania railroad stock is said to have jeopardized the entire fortunes of a group of great Philadelphia millionaires, and the New York World explains this struggle of the Titans of the money market as an attack of the combined Rockefeller and Gould interests upon President A. J. Cassatt of the Pennsylvania road. The Pennsylvania system had held Pittsburgh, with its enormous steel tonnage, as a sort of Gibraltar. Last spring Gould secured a railroad interest into Pittsburgh. About that time a contract expired between the Pennsylvania railroad company and Mr. Gould's Western Union Telegraph company in which Mr. Rockefeller is deeply interested. Mr. Cassatt refused to renew the contract and installed the Western Union's great rival, the Postal Telegraph, in every railroad station on the Pennsylvania system. The Western Union sought by an injunction to prevent any interference with its business. The answer of Cassatt was his order, on May 21 last, for the instant destruction of 2000 miles of Western Union poles and wires along the Pennsylvania. Wrecking crews were sent out, and in 35 hours nearly 300 miles of poles, some of them giant mast, carrying 100 wires each, were ruthlessly cut down—a destruction of $1,000,000 of the Western Union's property.

To the well prepared young man and woman business life holds opportunities as great as those in any profession. The property in a day. This was the first overt act of war, and according to the World the Gould and Rockefeller interests, with all the schemes known to financial generals and with their unlimited resources, have been able to strike back a staggering blow, and the end of the feud has not come.

With the sale of "Naulahka," Rudyard Kipling's former home near Brattleboro, the Vermont connections of this tasty and disagreeable English author—had may be said to have been severed. It was "knocked down" to a New York man for about one-third its value, which is an indication that the spirit of hero worship hasn't enhanced the price of Kipling possessions.—[Rutland News.]

This may pass for an opinion in Rutland, but it won't go in Brattleboro. In the years that Mr. Kipling lived in Brattleboro, Daniel Dummerston devoted himself strictly to his work. People generally respected his desire for privacy and could understand the reason for it. The few who knew him on terms of friendship found him an extremely attractive personality, and will always retain pleasant recollections of Kipling the man, not the author. The circumstances which drove Mr. Kipling from his Vermont home were regrettable, but he was not responsible for them. The News probably does not know that when Mr. Kipling last visited this country many business and professional men of Brattleboro joined in an invitation asking him to come to Brattleboro that a reception might be given in his honor, and expressed a wish that he might return to live in his former home. His reply was courteous and felicitous, but he was unable to accept the invitation.

It Can Be Spared.
The Christmas tree devastation will not flourish in Windham county this year as it has done for several years past. At least in neighborhoods where it has already been carried on—because the land owners have found out what the work of the tree cutters and tree dealers means. Originally the idea, or excuse, was that cutting off the young evergreens cleared the land and gave the grass in the pastures a chance. But nothing of the kind happens. The cutters cut the trees at whatever height suits their convenience, with no reference whatever to clearing the land. Quite the contrary, they even climb to within a few feet of the tops of tall, vigorous spruces and firs and ruin them by cutting off the tops, leaving the stumps standing. How a pasture, or a young growth of woodland, looks after this process can be imagined. Moreover, the farmers who have sold their trees on the stump for 1/4 to 1/3 cent apiece do not relish hearing the cutters brag, after their work is done, that trees which they have bought for this paltry sum will bring them $2.50 to $5 or even $10 in the city market. The Christmas tree industry, which ruins future woodland growth, without even the shadow of adequate return, is one that Vermont can do without.

The New Licenses.
Didn't they ramble?
Our Brattleboro license commissioners, we mean.

They showed their backbone by revoking the licenses when it was evident that liquor had been sold to minors, but their last action is difficult to explain. They said in the beginning that they did not intend to grant saloons licenses, believing that the liquor business could be conducted better in the hotels than in the saloons. Despite this they turned down the application of George Dannew, who has taken a lease of the Brattleboro House, and granted the privilege of selling in a saloon to P. L. Shea.

The Phoenix is not an advocate of any particular rum seller, but it cannot see why the commissioners changed their minds in reference to saloons and why C. C. Turner at the American House was given the preference over George Dannew at the Brattleboro House. Mr. Dannew has never been connected with the rum business. Mr. Turner, back in the old days of prohibition, was one of the several persons fined for illegal selling in the Brattleboro House. Mr. Turner was employed at the American House this year, while his brother, also a violator of the old law, was the licensee, and C. C. Turner, according to the evidence before the commissioners, was one of those who, by selling to minors, caused T. F. Turner to lose his license.

The granting of the licenses is more or less of a muddle, anyway. There is no provision in the present law to meet the contingency which the commissioners found themselves facing—nothing in the way of reference to granting licenses for anything less than a year, and nothing allowing pro rata payment of a license fee to permit selling for a fractional part of a year.

What the outcome will be is uncertain. The secretary of state, to whom the recommendation of the license commissioners is forwarded, may refuse to give the licenses their clearing papers for the time between now and next March.

License is not likely to prove a hardy perennial in Brattleboro. In fact, many admirers of license are free to admit that when the flowers bloom in the spring of 1904 license will be blasted, frost bitten by the votes at the March meeting.

Vaccination.
Vaccination may be all right; it is frequently more so, however, than the disease it is designed to prevent, and making it compulsory is to our way of thinking entirely wrong.—[Hardwick Gazette.]

The editor of the Gazette may have been led to assume the role of an anti-vaccinationist by his personal experience with the disease which prevailed in a mild form in Hardwick a few years ago, but he is taking a stand which is very rarely supported by physicians. Not so very long ago the mayor of Cleveland, Ohio, set up the claim that that city was free from smallpox and that the eradication had been brought about by a rigid system of sanitation, entirely without vaccination. Within six months the city had 522 cases and 73 deaths. Our surgeons on going to Porto Rico in '58 found 2000 cases of smallpox on the island and the disease had long been in an epidemic form there.

With compulsory vaccination the disease has been blotted out and the change of death rate in five years has been in the proportion of 621 to 2. The general neglect of vaccination in Germany brought an annual mortality of 20,000, and culminated in the epidemic of 1871 with 143,000 deaths. Compulsory vaccination brought the average death rate from smallpox in Germany from 20,000 to 115. In the Franco-German war the German soldiers were vaccinated, the French were not. The French lost 25,000 men from the disease, the Germans 278. Many other cases like these could be cited. That vaccination through successive generations has a modifying effect on the virulence of the disease when it does appear is now the belief of many medical authorities. Vaccination, however, should only be performed by reliable physicians who use thorough antiseptic precautions.

A Correct View.
[St. Albans Messenger.]

There is little likelihood that Governor McCullough will call a special session of the general assembly to consider the advisability of making an appropriation for the representation of Vermont at the St. Louis exposition which the lawmakers of 1902 had the subject in hand and refused to do anything about it. The Messenger used to think, once upon a time, that it was a businesslike thing to appropriate money for the representation of the state at these world's fairs, but they have become altogether too common to insure anything like a proportionate return for the money that must be spent upon them.

Canal Treaty Signed with Panama.
A treaty providing for construction of the Panama Canal by the United States was signed Wednesday night by Secretary Hay and Mr. Bunau-Varilla, the minister of Panama. The treaty gives the United States complete jurisdiction over the canal strip, and provides for the payment of $10,000,000 to Panama.

The departments of Cauca and Antioquia are threatening to secede from Colombia and seeking admission to the republic of Panama.

An invasion of the Isthmus by Colombian troops from Buenaventura is rumored. Minister Beaufort reports the situation in Bogota critical, and it is thought likely that relations between the United States and Colombia will be severed.

Reciprocity Bill Passed.
Twenty-one members of the House, some of them republicans, arrayed themselves in a hopeless minority against the Cuban reciprocity bill yesterday afternoon soon after 4 o'clock. A rising vote resulted in 355 in favor to 21 against.

A head-on collision of a freight train on the Big Four railroad between Mackinaw and Tremont, Ill., yesterday afternoon killed 21 men and injured at least 15 more. Wreckage was piled 30 feet high on the track. The collision took place on a sharp curve, neither train being visible to the other until they were within a few rods of each other.

GENERAL YOUNG'S WAY.
Back in the reconstruction period of the South, Lieutenant-General S. B. M. Young, the new Chief of the General Staff of the United States Army, proved himself a hero of the fearless, intrepid stripe. The incident occurred in Texas. He was in command of a garrison in the Lone Star state. Considerable friction developed between the soldiery and the citizens of the town. The blue-coats followed threats, and the blue-coats followed suit. Young respected the law, but those were strenuous times, and the iron hand was needed down in Texas. A rising vote resulted in 355 in favor to 21 against.

Finally the town authorities arrested one of the soldiers and haled him into court. Tension was high in the little town, and things looked dark for the prisoner. Young learned of his arrest. He didn't call in his staff of advice and he didn't wait to consult with his military jurists. The exigency had to be met quickly, and Young acted instantly. He ordered out a file of soldiers, placed himself at their head, and marched rapidly down the streets to the court-house. The march started the townsfolk. They gathered in angry groups, but they didn't phase the future commander-in-chief of the army.

On he led the detachment. "Column left!" rang out as the little file of soldiery marched with regular step to Young's relief detachment. Young's column surrounded the prisoner. Young glanced at the judge, saluted him in quick courtesy, and again turned to his men.

"About face, forward!" he ordered, and the soldiers with the rescued corporal in their midst moved out and filed up the streets to the army post.

It was a nifty act that might have precipitated riot in these days, but the citizens of the town were paralyzed with amazement, and to this day have never taken any steps in reprisal.—[Collier's Weekly.]
