Capac, Mich., Jan. 25, 1898.

T. F. Holden, Imlay City, Mich. My hens began to die. I bought a package of Star Poultry Powder and I have not lost one since I began feeding it to my fowls. I think it is the best poultry powder in the world. Yours Respectfully, Mrs. Jos. Frenett.

Saved our Fine Flock.

I am convinced that nothing equals Star Poultry Powder. I have used it with great results. This year when the cholera has been all around us, we saved our fine flock of 170. They are in a healthy condition and never had them lay so well. The difference in eggs doubtly pays for the powder. I advise all to try it.—Mrs. Jerry Winn, Imlay City, Mich.

Lost all my Young Chicks.

Imlay City, Mich., March 8, 1898. I have used Star Poultry Powder and find that the increased number of eggs more than pay for the powder. Besides being a good egg producer it makes a great difference in the health and appearance of poultry especially young chicks. Last year I lost every chick hatched until I commenced to feed the Star Poultry Powder, after which I did not lose any.—Robert Rutherford. SOLD BY GRANT HOLDEN.

A LETTER FROM THE SOUTH

Mrs. M. H. Taylor writes an interesting Letter About Her Visit Among the Southern People.

Paragould, Arkansas Aug. 12 '98.

Editor Expotior:—

Thinking some of the Yale friends would like to hear from the Sunny South, I will give a short account of my visit here. I reached Paragould, Ark., April 20th and found the trees in full foliage, the roses blooming, and vegetables of nearly every kind large enough to use. The corn growing in my brother's garden was three feet high. This is the land of flowers and song, the land of the magnolia and the mocking bird, where roses of richest tint bloom from February to December, and the Cactus, Cinnamon vine, Hybiscus, Jassamine, and the lovely Passion flower grow by the road side. Since May 10 the temperature has averaged 85 to 90 in the shade and no cases of sunstroke or prostration. Nearly every Southern family keeps a cow, and they churn the milk in a few hours after milking. As the homes are built without cellars the butter is a little soft. I could appreciate a roll of Mrs. Menerey's or Mrs. Barr's butter if it could come down here in a refrigerator car. On the 18th of July, I, in company with Mrs. W. H. Wycott, and a number of other Paragould people left here for Atlanta, Georgia, to attend the Confederate Veteran's Reunion. Atlanta is a magnificent city, having fully recovered from the ravages of the war. The Georgians are true Southerners, chivalrous, cultured, impulsively hospitable, and intensely loyal to their heroes. Our first visit was to the Exhibition grounds where the Reunion was being held. The exercises opened with prayer and singing led by General Gordon. The first battle flag brought in was that of the 32nd Tennessee regiment, said to be the finest Confederate banner now in existence that was carried through a battle. It was unfurled to the tune of "The Girl I Left Behind Me" while "Rebel yells" nearly brought down the house. Following came about a dozen tattered remnants of flags, soiled and battle scarred, but nevertheless dear to the heroes in grey, and as the strains of "Dixie" were heard, every son of the South stood up with bared head as the sacred relics of a lost cause passed in. There were speeches by Generals Gordon, Stephen D. Lee, Longstreet and others, when it was announced that Miss Winnie Davis had arrived. She came in a special car and was escorted to the platform by General Gordon, with an honorary guard on either side of the aisle. The band again gave "Dixie" and as the audience arose, "Rebel yells" went up from thousands of throats in honor of the daughter of the Confederacy, and of their Chief, whose memory they worship. It was thrilling to hear the matchless oratory of those grizzled heroes, glorying in the righteousness of the cause they had lost and the valor of the men who sleep in the dust yet true to the Star Spangled Banner, rejoicing in a re-united country, and ready to shoulder arms again for the Nation's weal.

Our next visit was to Fort McPherson where the wounded from Santiago are in camp. One of the soldiers said, "the men we went to give up our lives for are the lowest class of negroes. They steal everything they get their hands on. A few go into battle, a very few are the rest, follow after, go through the pockets of the dead, and hang around a fire like a pack of vultures when there is anything to cook. We have been waging a war of humanity on their account, and it would be more gratifying had they shown themselves worth fighting for."

We then walked over to where the Spanish prisoners were. They were mostly sitting around, some of them preparing dinner. They looked very cross at us at first, but when we spoke to them, they dropped their work and all stood with polite attention. Only one could speak any English, and asked him how many there were of them. He counted his fingers and said, "leven, non, sixteen." Just then the guard ordered us to "move on" and he bowed to us and said Non Anglaire, Salsa, Senorita." As our knowledge of Spanish was somewhat limited, we could only guess the interpretation.

Our next move was for the Cyclorama of the battle of Atlanta at Grant's park. The painting was done by a first class artist and cost $40,000. The representation is life size and was presented to the city by a citizen now residing there. Here was the battle in all its grandeur, and all its horrors. Through shot and shell the battle raged above the fallen dead, while on swept the martial ranks to conquer, or to die. Heroes of the sixties in their suits of grey, all of whom had fought and some of whom had bled on this very field, explained different phases of the battle. There were two brothers beside the old school house, one wearing the blue, the other the grey, both mortally wounded; one is holding his canteen to the pale lips of the other while life is fast ebbing away. There was also a humorist on the scene. Beside the long line of Uncle Sam's ambulances and beyond the line of firing were the commissaries and butlers who were trying to induce the men to come in their direction, and a goodly number were breaking ranks and going at a double quick gait, while their leaders were gallantly exhorting them to keep in line.

Leaving this, we hurried back to Pryor street to view the parade. Ominous clouds began to gather, the rain came in torrents while streaks of red shot up from the horizon to the zenith. Some imaginative person said it was indicative of the blood that was shed. On Saturday morning we left Atlanta for Chattanooga, a city beautifully located in a valley surrounded by mountains and the Tennessee river. We took the train to Chickamauga park where there are 20,000 soldiers at Camp Thomas. Our party were cordially invited to dine with the officers of Company D, 2nd Arkansas, and after dinner drove over some of the places of interest. It will be remembered that the battle of Chickamauga was one of the most sanguinary conflicts of the war. We drove past "bloody pond" where the water had been thick with the blood of the slain after one of the bat-ties. On the site of the widow Glen's house, General Winder's brigade is erecting an observation tower, 110 feet high. This was point contested and successively held by both Confederates and Federals, and finally the house was burnt by the rebels to prevent it falling into the hands of the blue coats. Naught remains save the orchard trees and old well sweep. Massive and elaborate monuments stand along the drive way and on prominent points of the battle ground.

Next morning we took electric cars for Lookout mountain. This was where the "battle above the clouds" was fought. We ascended by No. 2 Incline and visited Sunset rock and Lookout mountain, and the highest point on the mountain. From there can be seen seven states and Cumberland gap. Henry M. Stanley the African explorer standing on point Lookout, said: "The view from Lookout mountain is one of the most magnificent in the world." Here, General Hooker the Union Commander with 9,000 brave troopers, met the stubborn resistance of General Walthall's little army of 3,000 in the "battle above the clouds." Nature seemingly doubled her efforts in the formation of Umbrella rock, Natural bridge, Rock city, Linn lake and Falls and numerous other freaks of Nature. One can have no idea of the sublimity of the view. The mists on the mountain and the ever shifting shadows and varied tints of the rocks and foliage, fill the mind with wonder and awe. The ascent to Lookout is almost perpendicular in one or two places. The cars are drawn by steel cable cords and are seven minutes going up, and the same coming down. The road is constructed through solid rock. One ascent was sufficient for me.

Returning to Chattanooga, we took the electric cars for Missionary Ridge. This is about two miles east of the city and is about 500 feet above the valley. This was where General Bragg's headquarters were, but his army was in destitute circumstances living on half rations and with little clothing to keep them warm. Grant charged his men and ordered them to take the Ridge. The guns of the Confederates could not be depressed so as to make them effective. Deeds of valor there were plenty on both sides. All honor to the men who defended the Ridge as well as those who fought their way to its summit. The government has erected five observation towers 70 feet in height, one at Delong's place, one on Missionary ridge, one at Bragg's headquarters during the battle of Missionary ridge, one at Hall's Ford, where Bragg formed for the battle of Chickamauga, one near Jay's mill where the battle began, the other on Snodgrass Hill, where it closed. Large historical tablets 3 feet by 4 are erected along the boulevards giving a statement of the movements of the troops at these points. Fighting positions of all batteries are marked by guns of the same size and style used in the battle, and mounted on solid iron carriages painted to represent the original. We returned to Paragould by the way of Nashville and Memphis, Tennessee, crossing the Mississippi and St. Francis rivers.

Fearing that I have already trespassed on your valuable space, I will now close. Respectfully, Mrs. M. H. Taylor.
