Does Your Dollar Buy you a Full Dollar's Worth?

IN buying calico, or in buying toweling, or in buying any goods of this kind, a woman can tell just about when she is getting her money's worth, the same as she can tell when buying vegetables at the market, or meat of her butcher, or shoes of her shoe dealer, but in buying drug store goods it is entirely different. First you must take your druggist's word for the quality of the goods you buy. In no other business does so much depend upon quality as it does in the drug store. Especially is this true in the prescription department, the place that your doctor depends upon absolutely when there is sickness in your family.

The question is, in buying drug store goods, does your dollar always buy you a full dollar's worth? We tell you candidly and truthfully and without boasting that it always does just exactly this when you buy of us, for if there is one thing that we will not do, it is to dispense or sell goods of an inferior quality. We have a reputation in our locality which has taken an immense amount of hard work to build up, and not for a second would we do anything to impair this reputation. Your dollar always buys a full dollar's worth of Here is a case that takes the courage out of a man. When C. L. Messer was a resident of Marlette, Simon Vanderpool was making payments through him, on a home until only $50 remained to be paid.
