MECHANIC-ST. CHURCH OF CHRIST

January 2

Morning service 10:30 o'clock. Subject—"Building a Strong Church."

"The word church in the Greek is ekklesia; that is, 'called out.' In other words the church is a body, association or congregation of persons called out or set apart to perform definite service for God, and God is not up, but down—in the hearts of the people. So to do work for God is to work for the good of humanity. In this sense the above subject will be dealt with."

Sunday school 11:30. Let every member and teacher be present.

Young People's Meeting 6:00 o'clock local time.

Evening service 7:00 o'clock local time. Subject—"The Thing You Lack."

Both sermons Sunday will, in a partial sense, cover the duties of a Christian life.

We are beginning to talk about a revival meeting.

Eldred Charles, Minister.

TIME TO ACT

Don't Wait for the Fatal Stages of Kidney Disease. Profit By Yale People's Experiences

Occasional attacks of backache, irregular urination, headaches and dizzy spells are frequent symptoms of kidney disorders. It's an error to neglect these ills. The attacks may pass off for a time but generally return with greater intensity. Don't delay a minute. Begin taking Doan's Kidney Pills and keep up their use until the desired results are obtained. Good work in Yale proves the effectiveness of this great kidney remedy.

William Wilson, farmer, R. F. D. No. 5, Yale, Mich., says: "For a long time I was troubled by disordered kidneys. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and accompanied by a scalding sensation. There was also sediment in them. I tried many ways to get relief but was unable to find anything that would benefit me until I took Doan's Kidney Pills procured at Grant Holden's Drug store. I am pleased to say that they entirely corrected my trouble and restored me to much better health."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Wilson had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y. Adv.

A Race Between A Blown Horse And a Sound Man

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

When the great European war broke out Ben Hiddings, an American, nineteen years old, was seized with a desire to see something of the fracas. He had no preferences for either side, but found it more convenient to go to England and enlist there. Having been a national guardsman at home, he knew something of the duties of a soldier and was enrolled with a corps that crossed the channel after the first expeditionary force of regulars. He belonged to the cavalry.

One cold day in December he was scouting with a small portion of his regiment when they encountered a superior body of uhlans and were not only put to flight, but scattered. Ben instead of getting started toward the lines of the allies was headed in the other direction. It was near nightfall, and he got away from his pursuers under cover of the darkness. Wandering about, he came upon a house. Quite sure of a welcome from any Belgian, he rode boldly up to the door and shouted. An old woman appeared. Ben told her that he was a soldier in the British army and received a welcome. He was invited to put his horse in an outhouse and make himself at home in the dwelling.

The oldest daughter of the family was a pretty girl a year or two younger than Ben. He was a good looking young fellow, and the girl could not conceal her admiration for him. Already Red Cross supplies for the Belgians had begun to arrive from America, and when Ben avowed that he had come from that liberal land the whole family was quite ready to fall down and worship him. They persuaded him not to try to regain the British lines until the next day, when some expedition might occur to them by which they could assist him to do so.

Early in the morning Ben was awakened by men talking German under his window, and the Belgian girl rapped at his door and warned him that uhlans were below. Ben sprang out of bed and hurried on his clothes, and the girl led him to a garret, where she hid him under some old furniture. The uhlans found his horse in the shed and demanded to know where its owner was. They were invited to search the house, which they did, not overcarefully, and failed to find Ben. After a brief stop they made off, taking Ben's horse with them.

Scarcely had they departed when a violent snowstorm came on, with a high wind which blew the snow in huge drifts. The family with whom Ben was residing owned an old sleigh, but the horse had been appropriated by the army. It was suggested that they could borrow a horse some one might drive. Ben in the sleigh to a place where he could make a run for the lines of the allies. A boy about fifteen years old volunteered to scour the country for a horse and found one that had been left in a barn by a soldier who had taken a better one in his place. The boy brought the horse home, and since there was harness at hand, the animal was hitched to the sleigh.

The oldest daughter, whom they called Elizabeth, was selected to drive the American eastward. He doubled himself up under the seat, and blankets were used to cover him. When all was ready the girl touched the horse with the whip and Ben left his hosts, followed by blessings as one coming from the liberal land.

German troops were passed on the road, and had it not been that a pretty girl was driving it was doubtful if the couple in the sleigh would have got very far. Twice German soldiers debated whether or not they should take the horse, but in the first case Elizabeth kept them off by a smile, and in the second it was decided that the animal was not worth appropriating.

But after these two escapes they encountered a third, more serious. Approaching a house, Elizabeth saw a man in the uniform of a uhlans leaving it with the evident intent to intercept her. She concluded that he was in need of a mount and would take any horse he could get. Applying the whip, she succeeded in getting by the house before the uhlans reached the road. He called on her to stop and when she pushed on he fired a shot over her head. She paid no attention to this, and the man followed her on a run.

The horse was already winded and despite a sound drubbing could not be urged to a pace that would enable his driver to gain on the man. She notified Ben that he would be captured, and he came to the conclusion that he must fight for his liberty. He had his revolver, but a fight within the enemy's lines was liable to call new enemies, and he preferred some other method.

They came to a rise in the ground on the other side of which was a deep hollow. On either side of the road was a ditch that had been filled with snow. When they reached the bottom of the depression Ben, who had come out from under the seat and was looking about for means of escape, seeing the drift, jumped into it, sank in his waist and managed to get the rest of his body under before the pursuer came to the crest. Ben lay still, Elizabeth drove on, and the uhlans passed without seeing him.

Whether the uhlans captured the horse or not does not signify. Ben, after his pursuer had passed, emerged from the snow, took to a wood and the same evening appeared in camp none the worse for his experience.

TAUGHT BY THE KING.

A Lesson Given by Frederick William III. to His Steward.

King Frederick William III. of Prussia was a man of few words. Whatever he had to say was always brief and to the point, as the following anecdote from a foreign journal shows:

The king, who was accustomed to interest himself in all the details of court management, ordered his steward to take special pains to see that all the carriages were amply supplied with food and drink whenever they left for a journey of a day or so, but it sometimes happened that the steward dispatched the drivers without any food, giving them a coin, perhaps, to buy what they wanted. That usually meant that the driver went hungry, as he did not have much opportunity to leave his horses and dine at a restaurant.

At length the king became aware of his steward's failure to carry out his orders and awaited the next opportunity to bring the fact to his attention. He had not long to wait. That night the king stopped his coachman as he entered the courtyard and upon inquiry found that the man had had nothing to eat since breakfast. He held out a dollar in his hand that the steward had given him to buy food with. Without a word the king took the dollar.

He went into the castle and summoned the steward. That worthy appeared immediately and made a profound bow, but as he raised himself up he was surprised to feel a coin placed against his mouth.

"Eat it!" ordered the king.
"But, your majesty, I"—
"Eat it!" the king again roared.
"Why, your majesty, I can't eat it!"
"Oh, you can't? But you expected the coachman to? Well, in the future just remember that—that people eat food, not money. Do you understand?"
The steward understood. In the future the king's coachmen were amply supplied with provisions whenever they went upon a journey.

MAPS ON GLOBES.

The Spheres, Made of Brown Paper, Are Wonderfully Strong.

Few people could say of what substance globe maps are made and would be astonished to hear that brown paper is the chief material used. A matrix of wood is covered with strips of brown paper which have been well smeared with paste. The paper is laid on the matrix until it is about a sixteenth of an inch thick and the globe looks like a round football. When this paper covering is dry it is cut midway between what will be the two poles, removed from the matrix, and after an axis has been fixed in it the two hemispheres are glued together. Then this sphere of brown paper is coated with a composition plaster, the ingredients of which are a trade secret, and again left to dry.

After being tested to see that it is an exact sphere the meridians are marked on the globe to guide the girls who finish the work. The globe is then fixed in a clamp, which holds its axis, and a girl takes the engraved gores, cut ready for use, and pastes them on without overlapping. If the globe is exact the gores should fit so exactly that you cannot see where they are in the completed globe.

When the gores have dried on the globe is colored by a hand process, which is also done by girls, and then polished. The globe is now ready to be mounted on its stand and to have its meridian fitted. Formerly, says the World's Work, when the industry was most flourishing, the metal and wood work connected with the fittings formed separate industries, but today the globe maker does the whole work on his own premises.

It might be mentioned that globes thus made are so strong that a man could stand on one and not break it. Indeed, you cannot break one without using great violence.

Tennyson and Barnum.

Tennyson was extremely eager at one time to visit America, and touching this point a story is related to the effect that Barnum offered him an enormous sum to make the trip, though probably not as one of the attractions of the "greatest show on earth." "All you have to do," said Barnum, "is to stand on a platform and have your hands well shaken." The poet, however, declined the offer.

How Bamboos Bloom.

Bamboo plants are said to have the peculiarity of blooming at exactly the same time, whether in Europe or Africa, the difference in climate and surroundings seeming to make no change in the plants bursting into flower. They blossom rarely, but as they die immediately afterward this cannot be deplored. The plant is said to be exquisitely graceful and is easily cultivated.

That Sinking Feeling.

Sometimes a simple phrase will tell more than a volume of description. In such a phrase a soldier describes his sensations on going under fire for the first time. "It was," he says, "as if some one had given me a smack below the chest with the flat of a heavy spade."

His Title.

"If it were customary in this country to confer titles upon men who go in for literature, what would I be?" asked a concealed journalist of his senior.

"Baron of Ideas," was the terse reply.

If we could learn to forget by forgiving many a heartache would cease to day.
