School Days Here.

This is the month to prepare for school. If it is possible, have the children enter on the first day so they can start with their class and have no back work to make up later on. The school child should have as little home study as possible and should be made to remain out of doors for at least two hours of play daily after school.

Children who come directly home from a long school day and then curl up in a chair in the house to read or study until supper time, soon become pale and round-shouldered, have headaches, and dark circles under their eyes. If some home study is absolutely essential, have the child go to bed early and get up early in the morning, take a glass of milk and start studying an hour before breakfast. He will then be fresh and work twice as fast as if he had attempted this preparation in the evening when brains and eyes are tired.

Have the children in bed by 7:30 or 8:00 p. m., and never allow them to attend moving-picture shows or any other form of amusement that rob them of much needed early sleep which is especially essential during the school year. There is time enough for these later in life, and on Saturday afternoons. If mothers insisted on more sleep and regular hours for school children, there would be decidedly fewer cases of restless nights, St. Vitus dance and other nervous disorders.

The children who are old enough to go to school should receive their full share of wise thought and care at this time of the year, as well as the younger babies. The mother should personally visit the school and become acquainted with the teacher, not to criticize but to make friends with her and talk freely about "John's" or "Mary's" little shortcomings as well as their good qualities, in order that there may be a better understanding between teacher and pupil.—Marianna Wheeler, in "The Care of Children," in The People's Home Journal for September.

SAFE REMEDY FOR CHILDREN

Chas. Baker, Brownville, Tex., writes "For years I have used Foley's Honey and Tar and found it especially efficient for bad coughs of my children. I recommend it to my friends as a safe remedy for children as it contains no opiates. It is certain to bring quick and lasting relief." Stops cough. Herb T. Hennessy. adv.
