HERE AND THERE

The Caro Advertiser is entering upon its 53rd year of existence, one of the best weekly newspapers in Michigan. About fifty bankers of the local district of the Michigan State Bankers' association met on Friday at Marysville and St. Clair and combined business with pleasure.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

INTERESTING ITEMS FROM THE FILES OF THE EXPOSITOR IN 1900

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 26th, 1900, Miss Bernice Kelley was married to Porter Harris, of the firm of McIntyre & Harris. Miss Kelley, for four years had been the efficient and pleasant clerk in Yale postoffice.

The Yale Milling Co. was running nights in an effort to keep up with orders.

The resignation of Bernice Kelley from the postoffice brought Mrs. Mary Hennessy back to that position, one that she had held before.

The Capac fair was extensively patronized by Yale people.

Charley Manley is learning the jewelry business with L. Roy Fuller.

Marshal Chas. Emery was attending to the repairing of the old board side walk and the placing of new ones where needed.

The weather the latter part of this 20 years ago September must have corresponded with what we are now having, as the Expositor asks, "who can tell us of a last of September when the grass was greener and more plentiful, and all nature was more spring-like?"

The new brick harness shop that Wallace Adama was building was nearly completed.

A number of Yale citizens donated a new wheel chair to Melton Ferguson.

The Shakespeare Club met with Mollie Brown and began the study of "The Taming of the Shrew."

At this time Steve and Dick Windsor both lived in Yale. They are twins you know, and it was mighty hard to tell them apart. It's just as hard after these twenty years, but Steve moving to Port Huron has made lots of things easier for Dick.

"North of 56" Is Newest Locale for Settings of Unique Northern Story

(By James Oliver Curwood)

When "Back to God's Country" is shown on the screen at Princess Theatre next Tuesday and Wednesday, it will represent the accomplishment of a task of incredible magnitude.

Aside from the fact that it is a graphic version of "Wapi, the Walrus," which was published in God Housekeeping Magazine not long ago, it has the distinction of having been made farther north than any other picture in the history of the screen. All of the snow scenes were taken on the far shore of Lesser Lake, north of the 56th parallel.

Frequently the temperature was fifty degrees below zero and it was as cold as sixty degrees below the freezing mark. In this frigid temperature it was found necessary to draw all oil from the cameras before they could be operated.

A matter of scientific interest is the fact that in this far northern latitude, over 20,000 feet of film were shot without a single foot of static. This remarkable result was achieved, undoubtedly, because the two cameras in use were constantly left out of doors.

Probably no group of actors ever had a more interesting experience than those who were engaged in the making of the northern scenes of the picture. I went ahead with David Hartford, the director, to pave the way for the company, the arrival of which was greeted with a number of dogs and sledges, which conveyed them from the line of rail into the frozen Arctic regions.

One of the most remarkable achievements in motion pictures, I believe, was accomplished when we built a ship, one hundred and eighty feet long, in the ice of Lesser Slave Lake. This played the part of the frozen-in whaler, Flying Moon. The masts of heavy timbers were hewn out of the forest, but all lumber and other material had to be brought by dog sledge from the line of rail, many miles away.

Upon arrival, the members of the company found themselves in the midst of a howling wilderness. On the three sides of them were the frozen forests. North and east were the barren lands on which they were to enact the scenes for "Back to God's Country." Between them and the Arctic ocean there was not a foot of railroad or a settlement.

We burned night and day fires to keep out the intense cold. I passed up and down constantly among the actors, watching their faces and warning them at the first sign of frozen ear and nose. In spite of this, scarcely a member of the company got away without a frozen ear, nose or cheek. One member suffered a frozen foot.

Despite the fact that cast members were begged to take proper precautions and minute care of themselves, Ronald Byron, leading man, died soon after his arrival. The tragedy nearly resulted in giving up the venture.

Grit and determination on the part of the cast saved the day.

Henry Ford says: "The war is over and it is time war prices were over. There is no sense or wisdom in trying to maintain an artificial standard of values. For the best interests of all it is time a real effort was made to bring the country back to pre-war standards."

The Ford Motor Company makes this reduction in the face of the fact that they have on hand immediate orders for 146,065 cars and tractors. The Company will suffer temporary loss in using up material bought at high prices, but it willingly does so.
