Salon Shakespeare Circle.

The Salon Shakespeare circle was entertained in a novel way, when Miss Helene Samfield, the leader, invited the class to celebrate Shakespeare's birthday with her on Wednesday afternoon.

Appropriate quotations from every direction greeted the guests, but the one that had them guessing were the words "All the World's a Stage" which was on a mysterious-looking curtain, which, on being drawn, displayed a series of poses of "Shakespearean Women," given by Miss Clara Jean Lewin. The class was told to guess the characters, and so well did this little miss enact these characters that several ladies had to draw for the prizes. The prizes were won by Mrs. J. D. Marks and Mrs. Clara Lewin, Miss Clara Lewin was also presented with a prize.

A lovely two-course luncheon was served carrying out the color of the purple. An ivory basket filled with cut flowers rested on a large purple centerpiece. Around the edge of the table purple bows were caught here and there with bunches of violets.

The class presented Miss Samfield with a writing companion, Mrs. Eugene Greener making the presentation speech.

THE STANDARD BEARERS

(To the Mothers Whose Boys Did Not Come Back) I'm glad with all my nation that our boys are home again. I'm proud with all my nation that they came back hero men. I add my smile to all the smiles that all the crowded streets. My heart is full of welcome for each soldier boy I meet. I don't know all they suffered, for I wasn't over there. I don't know all the hardships that they have had to bear. But I know their strength and courage, and with a loyal valor each one answered to the call. I know that they were always taught to win in every fray. And they never could retreat, for they didn't go that way. I know that they were fair in war, though firm they were and dauntless, too; their mothers raised them so. And when I look at all the mothers, wives and sisters dear, I find my happy, smiling face has dissolved into a tear. For mothers think sadly of the brave sons that they bore. Who have gone to sleep forever upon a stranger shore. They are waiting here and yearning so to greet that much loved face With heart strings taut to breaking when they see his empty place. These sons have made a hallowed spot of lands across the foam, For where they laid them down to sleep is dearer still than home. And never more can foreign be, the cradle of their dust. The sacrifice we made to God for what is right and just. O'er the crimson of their life blood, their honor pure and white, The stars they won in glory are emblazoned every night. The emblem of a nation true, whose sons have proven great. And justified in service there, the star of every state Is stamped through all eternity above The soil and dew. By our boys who placed on victory's height our own red, white and blue. CHARLIE W. STURM. Memphis, April 16, 1919.
