

The Adventures of Ann

"I didn't mean to hurt you," Ann apologized to Frank.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The evening Ann arrived home after Harwood's party and met Frank waiting for her on the front steps she had never been so glad to see anyone in her life. "Oh, Frank," she said, "I'm awfully sorry. I had those words the day you had the fight. I didn't mean to hurt you—honest, I didn't."

Ann felt happy and secure when in Frank's presence—much different than she had felt among the crowd at Harwood's. She left Frank at the door of her apartment, and as she tip-toed in she found Betty still up waiting for her. She did not tell Betty any of the details of the party at Harwood's, except that she had had a wonderful time. But Betty, who was always observing, noticed a change in Ann. A different and more serious Ann than the one who had said good-bye earlier in the evening.

The mysterious woman of the top floor came down to call on Ann early the next morning. Only Ann and Claire were home as both Betty and their father were at work. The mysterious woman pictured to Claire and Ann what a wonderful time they would have on Harwood's yacht and urged them all to come. Ann told her she did not think she would go, giving as an excuse in front of Claire that she was sure to be ill. But Claire was enthusiastic about going and said they would all just love to go as they had never been on a yacht and it must be wonderful indeed.

Ann, however, tried in every way to get out of going. When Betty and her father came home that evening Claire told them all about the wonderful invitation. Betty at first was like Ann, and did not care to go, but there was nothing else to do when her father said: "We sure are going. I wouldn't miss a chance like that for anything. It's a fine opportunity for Ann. What's the matter with you two girls, wanting to pass up a top-notch time like that? Will you make me solid with Harwood, too. You bet we're going."

BUILDERS OPPOSE RAISE IN WAGES FOR BRICKLAYERS

The Builders' exchange will resort to an educational campaign of publicity to combat the increase in wages which the Bricklayers' union will demand after Jan. 1. The increase will be fought to the last ditch, it is said. The bricklayers have announced that they will demand an increase of 25 cents an hour, thus bringing their pay to $1.50 an hour from the $1.25 they now draw.

Members of the publicity committee have been named by the exchange, and they not only will prepare such statements as are to go to the reading public, but they will appear before various clubs in the city to combat the increase, which they say would seriously affect building operations, if granted.

E. W. G. Meers, secretary of the Builders' exchange, said Friday, in commenting on the demand of the bricklayers:

"The Builders' exchange desires to play fair with all members of the local building industry, but if the latest demands of the bricklayers were granted it would only lead to similar demands from other organizations, and there would be no justice nor consistency in permitting further increase in wages when the cost of living is on the downward trend."

Remodel Lyceum Stage For Grand Reopening Sunday

An innovation in stage settings will be shown the Memphis public Sunday afternoon when Loew's Lyceum, which has been closed since the opening of the new State theater, reopens with a policy of exclusive first-run feature photoplays and an augmented orchestra.

An entirely new stage, modeled after the one used by the Strand in New York, has been constructed. The silvered screen is flanked on either side by elaborate drops, depicting a Venetian garden scene, one by day and the other evening. A veritable garden of real flowers and ferns will be used on the new stage and the feature concert orchestra to be used under the new policy will be placed to the right of the screen, visible through an ornamental gateway but out of line with the picture itself.

The entire theater has been renovated, redecorated and refurbished. The brass railings, purchased years ago, have been rubbed until they shine, new three-way light system installed, new carpets laid, and heavy new draperies purchased for the boxes and lobby.

Lionel H. Kovic, assistant to E. A. Schiller, general representative for Loew's Southern and Southwestern circuits, remained in Memphis after the opening of Loew's State to personally supervise the remodeling of the Lyceum. Mr. Kovic, a veteran of the Loew organization, has spared no effort to give to Memphis the best money can buy for the Lyceum, and he believes the result is going to exceed even his anticipations.

A. B. Morrison will be manager of the Lyceum and the Kahn to direct the augmented concert orchestra. The program is to be changed weekly and will include an exclusive first-run feature film, a comedy, scenic and news reel. The first film to be shown will be "Madame X," with Pauline Frederick.

A class of about 40 will be graduated from the B. Y. P. U. training school at Bellevue Baptist church Friday night and post graduate degrees will be awarded to about 60 more. This will bring to a close the fourth annual session of the training school.

John W. McCall, local attorney and president of the First Baptist Brotherhood, made the principal
