Ald. Wood and Eicher have been to Omaha looking over the new jail there. Capt. Eicher complained of the narrowness of the doorways.

Last evening the Council Bluffs base ball association gave their first annual dance at Bloom & Nixon's hall. It proved as enjoyable as was promised, and was largely attended.

Chas. Sanderson's team took a lively run last evening from the Northwestern depot up to Pearl street. The wagon was somewhat shattered and one of the horses had a bad out on one leg.

Justice Abbott yesterday discharged the man Woodman charged with stealing an overcoat, it proving to be a breach of trust rather than larceny, the coat being his own, but pledged for board, and handed over to him by the landlady on his promise to pay the bill.

The talk of getting electric lights for Council Bluffs is on the increase. Information is being gathered to present at the next council meeting to show up its favorable side, while the complaints against the present street lighting are rolling up like a thunder storm.

Mr. George F. Morgan, the importer of stock, will sell a large number of brood mares and geldings in any quantity, single or by car load, at the Union stock yards, Council Bluffs, on Friday and Saturday, October 20th and 21st. The sale will be positive. All stock guaranteed.

A warrant has been sworn out for the arrest of Charles A. Clemens on the charge of obtaining about $75 worth of goods from F. W. Spelman & Bro., under false pretenses. It is said that Clemens represented that he had paid coming to him from the Union Pacific road, whereas he had drawn his money.

An Ehrenstein, hearing Justice Abbott remark that he needed a coal box, presented him yesterday with a fine impromptu one. It was a big sea chest, which the donor used in a Russian expedition in search of the north pole. The box has traveled thousands of miles and is still in good condition and almost too valuable a relic to be used for such base-burning purposes.

There was a wedding in the Catholic church Wednesday evening, the bridegroom being John Toller, and Mrs. I. Fink, whose home is in Mills county. The happy couple preceded at once to their new home on Platter street, where a reception of friends was held, which was highly enjoyable. Many valuable presents were bestowed upon the newly wedded couple. Among them was a painting by Miss Hilda Ehrenstein, representing Washington Irving's home on the Hudson. She gives promise of becoming a more than ordinary artist, and expects in the spring to go to Des Moines, on the Rhine, to continue her art studies.

The city calaboose grows deeper in disgrace daily. The glass is knocked out of the windows, there is no stove, no bed, in fact nothing but a cold, dirty pen, into which the unfortunate drunks are thrust, while confidence men, burglars and robbers are allowed to walk out of court free. The proposed new city jail will not be started before next spring, if it is then. In view of that fact there should be some improvements made, so that men who are arrested may at least be treated as well as a man would his hog. One of the city's well-known business men, in calling at police headquarters the other day, took a peep into the calaboose. He had read accounts of it in the papers, but, even thus prepared to see a filthy place, was surprised and shocked, it was so much worse than represented. "Why," said he, "I wouldn't want to occupy even a room next to it. You couldn't hire me to, I'd be afraid of it on account of health." A policeman yesterday admitted to THE BEE man that he wouldn't stay in there one night for $60. Scores of such remarks are made by those knowing the facts. The place is worse than a disgrace.

Announcement. To the Voters of Kane Township. I hereby announce myself as an independent candidate for constable, subject to the voice of the voters on ensuing election. C. W. WRELEY.

If Adam had had a game of "Fifteen" placed in his hand at an early period of his existence, the whole course of history might have been materially altered for the better, and if Billions, indignation, sick headache or dyspepsia were not, indeed, SPENDING BLOSSOM would not be needed. For 50 cents, trial bottles 10 cents.

A FREE FOR ALL.

A Young Man Charged With Forgery is Set Free Without a Hearing.

Three Others Charged With Burglary Got Away Also.

THE BEE has of late shown up several instances of the ease with which criminals are allowed to get away from justice. But a few days ago Gibson and Dorsey were arrested while going through a valise of which an old man had been robbed by being knocked down at night on the streets. Gibson ran away from Officer Morse Dorsey was discharged by Justice Frainey, because no prosecution appeared. Yesterday there was another free-for-all. The first case was that of Burt Carter, who was arrested for uttering a forged instrument. He was at work for some three men, who were boarding with Mr. Mitchell, of the Rock Island house. They all went to Omaha on business and Carter returning presented to Mr. Mitchell a written order, claiming that his employers didn't have money enough with them to pay him off and wanted Mr. Mitchell to hand him $4. This request was complied with and on Mr. Mitchell learning that the order was forged had the young man arrested.

On being brought before Judge Aylesworth yesterday morning the prisoner's attorney, J. G. Tipton, filed the usual application for a change of venue and it was granted, the case of course going to Justice Frainey. C. R. Scott, who appeared for the prosecution, remarked that the case might as well be dismissed as to be sent there, and asked Judge Aylesworth to dismiss it. The judge decided that the change of venue having been taken the case was out of his jurisdiction, and that it must be dismissed before Justice Frainey if anywhere, but advised Scott to go on with the examination, as Justice Frainey would hold the young man if the evidence warranted. Scott said it would only pile up costs for nothing, and away the case went. On reaching Frainey's court, Scott promptly asked to have the case dismissed, and of course the justice did so. So the young man walked forth free without even a hearing.

It is generally supposed that Mr. Hight, who is Mr. Scott's partner, is said as county attorney for prosecuting such cases, and that he is under obligations to do so. If Scott feels these obligations resting upon him as a substitute, it strikes the average citizen that he ought to have gone ahead with the prosecution and not desert his post of duty in a mill because he had no faith that justice could be had in that court. He ought to have gone ahead with his duty, for the belief that others do not or will not do their duty is hardly an excuse for him in not doing his. The county attorney, or his proxy, should have done his part, and then if any blame followed, let it fall on Justice Frainey.

After the case was dismissed another action could have been commenced before some other justice, but the prosecution did not seem to care to trouble about it. As long as the case was there, the witnesses present, and all ready for a hearing, the court would have won in popular esteem if he had refused to let the matter drop on account of the absence of the prosecuting attorney, but had gone ahead and heard the case. Perhaps there might have been some legal technicality to prevent this, but common sense would dictate such a course, rather than have alleged criminals slide out.

The burglary cases were also disposed of yesterday. Three young fellows, giving the names of Harry Carna, Frank Hall and Frank Peroleo, were brought before Justice Frainey a few days ago for examination on the charge of burglarizing Mr. A. Wheeler's storehouse. Frank Hall was the first examined. As a witness against him appeared William Ross, who admitted being the fourth member of the gang, and who quailed on the others. He testified fully and in detail, and told an apparently straight story about the whole affair. Two second-hand clothing men testified that Ross sold two of the stolen overcoats to them. Ross said that Hall sold one of the coats to Mrs. Davis the evening after the robbery. Mrs. Davis testified that Hall sold her the stolen coat on that evening, and identified Hall as the man. Mr. Wheeler testified as to his storehouse being broken open and identified the coat as the one stolen. Justice Frainey after having the case under advisement for a day or so, yesterday decided to discharge Hall on the ground laid down in the statutes that "a conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense." The court held that Mr. Wheeler knew nothing about Hall being connected with the burglary, nor did Mrs. Davis know anything about the burglary, and hence Ross was not corroborated.

This may be all according to law, but if so the law needs patching badly. The man Ross when arrested, confessed to the officers, and described the three others concerned with him. The police arrested them. They answered the description, and were identified by Ross. Mr. Wheeler testified that the burglary was committed, and identified the stolen coats. Mr. Davis identified Hall as the one who sold one of these stolen coats to her. If this sort of evidence, under the law, is not enough to make a man believe that "the crime had been committed and that there was probable reason to believe that the defendant committed the crime," then the law is not as good as the common sense of an average sort of a man, knows nothing about law. Justice Frainey supports his decision by a staggering array of heavy authorities, and relies himself by these of character of leniency or corruption.

After the giving of this decision Mr. Scott abandoned the other cases as hopeless, there being no stronger evidence in them than in Hall's case. If in order to hold criminals for trial, it is necessary to have a score of eye witnesses, the police might as well abandon the arresting of burglars, highwaymen and others who ply their trade in the dark, and when not watched.

DORSEY'S RECORD. A Few Facts For Those Who Have Been So Zealous in Defending It, and Getting Him Free.

Tom Dorsey has gained some unenviable notoriety here of late on account of the easy way in which he got out of a charge of highway robbery. The particulars of the farcical way the case was treated by the powers that be, have been already pretty thoroughly aired, and have excited no small degree of indignation, but a few of the railway men have been pretty anxious to have him dealt with gently, claiming that they knew him to be a straight man, and proposed in the generosity of their hearts to contribute from their hard earnings in order to get him free. For the benefit of those and for the general public interest, THE BEE has been looking up Tom Dorsey's record.

It is found that Dorsey, with three other, some five or six years ago, burglarized several business houses in Jewsville, Wis. One of the gang turned state's evidence, and a part of the plunder was recovered. Dorsey was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary at Waupun, and served "that time less what was allowed him for good behavior. Once before that he was engaged in a 'row' in which he hit a man over the head with a billiard cue, and in return was shot in the breast, and it is said still carries the ball. If Dorsey showed any disposition to lead a straight life, and redeem his name, it would be hard to rake up such bits of history, but when he is arrested here for knocking an old man down at night and robbing him, and is allowed to go free, only to engage in other ruffianly conduct, it is well enough to have the public understand what manner of man it is that is thus allowed to stalk through the town, laugh at the administration of justice here, and boast that he got out of a serious scrape at only the cost of a few dollars.

The Coming Comet in Congress. Cincinnati Commercial. No doubt the Quixotic plan of sending campaign funds down into one of the Texas districts, attributed to Jay Hubbell, can be explained by the fact that Colonel Tom Ochiltree is running for congress on the republican ticket in that benighted province of the southwest. Nothing else that human ingenuity could suggest would explain the curious anomaly. Colonel Ochiltree is a most remarkable man in many respects. He has red hair, wears an extremely large waistband, and can juggle the English language with as much facility as he can order a Delmonico meal.

Aside from this, however, he is a genius. As Elijah Pogram, one of the esteemed characters in modern fiction, would remark, he is an institution of the country. He has been on terms of the most intimate personal friendship with every statesman from Thomas Jefferson down to our times, and generally has made it a rule to accept them tamely by their Christian names. He just wages into their confidence, so to speak; captures their hearts, as it were. He is equally well acquainted with the conspicuous ornaments of the turf. Named originally for a distinguished racer, he has been true to the association of his pedigree, and made horse-racing one of the prof and studies of his life. He can begin with the horses that were yoked to the car of the prophet Elisha, and carry you on down in an unbroken series of quadrupled exploits to Foxhall and Parole.

Aside from this, however, he is a genius. Politically a genius. He "fit into the late unappreciated" on the circuit, without greatly depleting the Federal treasury; and, when the curtain fell and Southern hopes were glimmering, the Colonel made one of the greatest efforts in his life. He experienced a change of heart. With a soul and an energy that clearly show he was a convert of the most pronounced type, he cried down Democracy and Bourbonism so lustily that Grant forced him at the point of the bayonet to accept the marshaling of Texas as a reward. This little episode in his life should not, however, be treasured up against him, because he had deputies to attend to the work, and he has done magnificent resting, enough since he left the office to atone for any suspicions of industry that may have crossed the pure mind. When Mahone advertised himself as the mechanic who intended to crack the Solid South with the hammer of coalition, Colonel Ochiltree appears to have seen a golden opportunity, perhaps even fame, rising up in the distance. He had nothing special on hand at the time, so he decided, after consulting friends, to host himself as a candidate for congress in the Lone Star State.

The intimate friendship of General Grant which the colonel gets up at midnight to think about, would be a powerful lever, and then with the help of general disintegration, that was to make a howling wilderness of Bourbon supremacy, he would be carried in triumph to the capital. Events of history have now placed stalwart in command of the government. The colonel's alliance with Grant and Arthur is undeniably close. Hubbell, who holds the purse strings, is open to conviction from the white house, and the colonel is smart enough to pull the wires. Here you have a complete chain of testimony, connecting the anti-rogue aspirant of Texas with the plebeian check-bag of the campaign committee.

Of course it would be unwise to predict that the colonel, with even this powerful assistance, would be able to pry his way into congress, but, as we said before, he is an institution of the country. He has the perseverance of the soldier, the beauty of Beau Brummage, and the poetic grace of Sam Ward. If elected, he would tower head and shoulders, like a Norway pine, above the congressional pigmies who try to make a little notoriety by taking liberties with the truth. There may be competitors in the field, who have achieved a certain local celebrity for tampering with the truth, but for ornamental work, with deep, dignified and a double row of fluting up the back, there are experts who regard Tom Ochiltree, in a national sense, as the most scientific producer of romantic fiction of the age. He is not malicious, ugly and dangerous, but genial, versatile, and amusing—as much of an American feature as the cotton gin. If he should get to congress the standard of Munchausens in that body will be raised.

Reader a Slow Train. Traveler's Magazine. "Conductor," said the gray-haired man, who had been craning his neck out of the window to learn the cause of the delay, "what's the matter?" "We're on the side track, waiting for the freight," replied the conductor.

"Are we tied to a tree?" demanded the gray-haired man.

"Certainly not," replied the conductor.

"Not hitched to anything!" exclaimed the passenger, rising in dismay and making for the door.

"What do you want to be hitched up for?" inquired the conductor, somewhat disturbed by the gray-haired man's actions.

"Nothing, nothing; only suppose that freight train should strike us and drive us back a foot! Oh, you may play it on the rest, but you can't catch me for a sleeping-car berth while you make up the lost distance! I went over this road when I was a boy, and now I'm on my way back home! Give it to strangers, but don't try it on life-long travelers!"
