

THE 17th OF IRELAND.

An Appropriate Celebration of St. Patrick's Day.

St. Patrick's day, so inspiring to every native of the Emerald Isle, and their children as well, was appropriately celebrated in this city. It was observed strictly as a religious holiday, services being held in all the Catholic churches, morning and evening, large audiences attending each service. Sermons were delivered applauding the great work of St. Patrick in converting the pagan chiefs of Ireland and their followers to christianity, the stamp of which is discernible in every nation on earth to-day. There are few in the history of the world whose nobility of character, humility and charity has left such an imperishable record in the cause of christianity as that of Ireland's patron saint. In every clime and continent can be found strong evidences of the faith which he planted in Ireland, and to his zealous work the Catholic church owes the greater portion of its strength and support in this and generations past.

The banquet and musical entertainment given in the evening by the A. O. H. was the principal celebration of the anniversary in this city. The hall of the association, corner of Thirteenth and Jackson streets, was beautifully decorated. The stars and stripes and green all banners, surrounded by wreaths of evergreens, covered the walls. At the head of the main stairs "Welcome," wrought in evergreens, extended a "Oad Milia Failthe" to the guests. Over the door a huge banner in evergreen presaged "Good Luck" to all. A large number of evergreen mottoes greeted the eye in every direction. The symbol of the organization, "Triumph, Unity, True Christiana Charity," occupied a central position, flanked by the words "Ireland a Nation" and "God Save Ireland." Among the other mottoes were, "St. Patrick our Patron," "Ireland and the World," "E in go through," "Ireland must and will be free." The arrangement of the wreaths and flag, particularly the construction of the mottoes, were artistic and a credit to the gentlemen and ladies in charge.

Over a large table, loaded with fruits, cakes, meats and other tempting edibles were arranged across the hall and fully six hundred persons sat down to the feast. The banquet occupied nearly two hours, after which the regular programme commenced. The chairman of the evening, Hon. Richard O'Keefe, delivered a short address on "The Day of the Patron," thanking the large audience present, on behalf of the Ancient Order, and particularly the ladies, to whose energy and attention the success of the entertainment was due.

Vocal and instrumental music followed, interspersed with recitations, each receiving enthusiastic applause and requests. The entertainment continued till midnight. It was in every respect a great success and was a credit alike to the Ancient Order and the Irish people generally.

Moody's Misfortune. An amusing illustration of the transcendent wickedness of some mortals, has just come to light in the robbery of Mr. D. L. Moody, the evangelist, who has arrived in Omaha. It appears that a box of books containing bible, hymns, etc., had been shipped from Chicago to the care of a gentleman, who is interested in the movement, whose name is suppressed for obvious considerations. The box was stolen from the house of the latter, and now the evangelist is out by a good round sum. The thieves are, of course, unknown. Marshal Cummings has been notified and is searching for the recalcitrants. Some slight clue is obtained in the information that a man has been scolding among the Tenth street pawn shops, trying to dispose of a set of books of similar description to those lost.

The Sinners Want a Show.

OMAHA, March 17, 1885. To the Editor of The Bee. Will you please ask Mr. Moody if he will not make an appointment and speak to the sinners of Omaha when he has finished talking to the saints, where we can get admission without being obliged to play the Pharisee in order to get a ticket? When Mr. Moody comes to greet his flock around the throne of grace, will he ask them if they have their tickets with them, or if they have violated either of the ten commandments in procuring it? A SINNER.

THE WESTERN LEAGUE.

A Chance for Omaha to Secure a First class Base Ball Nine.

Manager T. P. Sullivan, of the Kansas City base ball team, of the Western League, arrived in the city yesterday morning with the intention of taking some steps toward having Omaha represented by a club in that organization. The Western League, Mr. Sullivan says, has now seven clubs—those of Minneapolis, St. Paul, Kansas City, Cleveland, Toledo and Milwaukee. There is room for but one more club, and to Omaha the chances of securing representation in the league is now tendered.

It may be remarked incidentally that four cities are now seeking entrance into the league: Cincinnati, St. Louis, Dayton, Ohio, Springfield, Ohio. It has been decided, however, that as Omaha is exactly on the circuit between Kansas City and St. Paul, to her the first choice will be given. St. Louis is an earnest applicant for the place (Lucas having made strenuous efforts for admission). So far as her geographical position is concerned, she might with propriety be allowed admission. But the officers of the Western League bear in mind that Lucas went back on them once before, and hence decline his proposition. The League will be obliged to play with the Leagues next year, though with a greatly weakened team, as some of the best players he had engaged have been criticised by the League.

Now is the chance for Omaha to secure first-class sport for the season about to open. It is to be hoped that the lovers of the national game will not ignore the opportunity. A meeting was held last night by a number of interested men, in order to informally discuss the subject, and an open meeting will be held to-night.

A STRANGE COUPLE.

A Baby with the "Big Head" and a Pretty Woman Filled with Thunder and Lightning—A Shocking Girl.

A prominent physician yesterday called a Brex reporter's attention to a singular freak of nature, now on exhibition at the Dime Museum, and advised him to examine it. Going to the room the reporter met Mrs. Cross, who held a small child about three years old, perfectly well formed, in good health, of the best disposition at all times, with perfectly clear mental powers, and only suffering with a big head. And the child's head is a rouser. His height is 3 feet 4 inches, and his head is 32 inches in circumference. It is by no means pleasant to look at, by reason of its disproportion to the body of the little fellow.

While there, among other curiosities was seen a wonderful lady, Mrs. Adella Patterson, nee Brasley, of West Virginia. Mrs. Patterson is a petite blonde, aged nineteen, with pretty face, peculiar winning smile and affable and cheerful. She is a condensed thunder-cloud, emitting lightning-flashes at all times, which are occasionally accompanied by explosions like thunder. She says a damp weather she seems to lose property or power, but it accumulates in dry weather until she is so charged with electric power that she can light a lamp or gas jet with her finger, or with an icicle held in her hand. That she can do is true, though she says a'ter very many persons have been shocked by her she grows weak and feels tired and worn out. The pretty lady had a very pleasant chat with the reporter and showed him that her remarkable power, which none of her relations possess, is no humbug, for a touch of her hand sent a thrill through every fibre of his frame—it must have been electricity, although he has never been struck by lightning before. It was something surely.

Empty in the Office—Editor's Gone.

Washington Correspondence Baltimore Herald. The proprietor, editor and local editor of a tri-weekly paper at Jackson, Miss., are here, each in search of an office. The proprietor wants to be land agent, the editor is ambitious for a clerkship, and the local editor will take anything he can get. When the editor was asked to-day what they would do with the paper if all got appointments, he said: "Oh, damn the paper! we'll suppress it!"

The grandparents of a nine-month-old baby girl at Erie have presented it with a superb sapphire necklace, and the largest diamond to be found at a leading New York jeweler. They promise to add each year two equally gorgeous gems.

A most remarkable or unique race, says a traveler, does not exist on the continent of Africa than the Masai. They are a magnificent modeled savages, beautifully proportioned and characterized by the smooth and rounded line of the Apollo type. The women are very decently dressed in bullock's hide. They wear, by way of ornament, from twenty to thirty pounds of thick iron wire coiled round the limbs, arms and neck, besides a great assortment of beads and iron chains.

MORE BLOOD.

Alonzo George Several Times Shot by Dr. Morphner.

Wounds Not Dangerous but Rather Disagreeable—Dr. Morphner Bailed and George at Home.

At about 8:30 last evening four pistol shots in quick succession were heard on Thirteenth between Harney and Farnam streets. The numerous crimes lately chronicled here in Omaha have, as it were, made the citizens nervous, so little time elapsed before men were there looking to see who had been shot this time.

As nearly as the reporter caught them the facts are these. Alonzo George, a hickman known in the city, was visited by his wife yesterday evening at Higgin's place where George works and told him a man had been following her about the streets, and that she had come for him (George) to go home with her, as she felt uneasy. As she was walking on Thirteenth between Harney and Farnam streets, about the hour named, with her husband, the man approached and placed his hand on her arm. When he did so, George asked if he had not made a mistake and at the same time struck at and knocked the man down. He at once arose, drew his pistol and fired at George, the bullet passing through his coat and entering the flesh and not at midnight found by Dr. Hyde, who was called to attend him. When the first shot was fired, hitting George, he pulled his pistol also, but it failed to fire, only snapping. The man who fired immediately fired again three times, the first of these three shots (being the second shot) struck George in the arm above the elbow, the second his wrist and the last missed him entirely. It was nearly dark. The man ran off and hid in a saloon, but was subsequently, on the second search of the police, found and proved to be Dr. Omar Morphner. He was arrested, but gave bail, by order of Justice Weis, for his appearance to-day. This is George's version of the circumstances. The doctor's story is that he was passing the place named; a woman met him and spoke; he offered her his hand, when a man jumped from the dark and struck him a heavy blow, knocking him down. It was totally unexpected, as he did not know who it was until after the shooting. As soon as he could, he fired at the fellow who struck him with the result stated. There seems to be a cat in the meat but somewhere about this thing which it may be the hearing will cause to jump. The statements given are as nearly as possible the versions of the facts given by the parties concerned. The Bee's reporter gives them—and thus scores one more bloody deed since Sunday morning last.

THE BATTLE OF THE CRATER.

Graphic Account of the Springing of the Petersburg Mine.

How Near the Movement Came to Causing Great Disaster to the Confederates and Why It Failed—The Fierce Fight After the Explosion.

Written for the National Republican. The weather around Petersburg about the close of July, 1864, was awfully hot—too hot to do anything comfortably but lie in the shade and use a fan—and yet it was made much hotter for the confederate troops by the inconsiderate activity of Gen. Grant's army both north and south of the James river. On the north side the fighting had reached the dignity of a battle, for considerable bodies of troops had been engaged on both sides and the federal forces had succeeded in taking some redoubts and rifle pits on the outer line of defense, and were able to hold on to them. What these demonstrations meant in the grand scheme of things we were soon to find out.

For weeks the officers who got a twelve hours leave of absence from the lines to visit Petersburg were full of talk in the provost marshal's office—a place of general rendezvous—OF MINES AND COUNTERMINES. In course of construction in and about the forts on the outer line, and the artillery officers in particular, whose batteries were placed in these forts, appeared to feel a deep interest in the subject, and well they might. It is not pleasant "to sleep over a volcano," as the saying goes, and to contemplate the possibility of taking an involuntary flight skyward before one could say "Jack Robinson." The element of uncertainty and suspense—very trying to the most courageous—was that it would cut two, Petersburg at their mercy, and compel Lee's retreat. Had the programme been fully carried out, I don't know what would have been the issue, but from what follows it can be easily seen that Gen. Lee had one of his best divisions massed within striking distance for just such a contingency as was actually called upon to meet. Although some of the first line gained the crest above the crater, numbers sheltered themselves within the sunken ground from the storm of cannon shot and bullets that was now being poured into them. For at this juncture Gen. Mahone's division came marching forward to the rescue. Gen. Lee had brought Mahone up at night or two before in expectation, I believe, of just such an attack as this which was delivered. This division and Pickett's were the only two distinctively Virginia divisions in the army—that is to say composed exclusively of Virginians. Mahone's was new fighting literally for their homes, for his regiments were raised in the southside. The division always fought gamely, but they could themselves, so to speak, on this day. Whatever may be thought of Gen. Mahone's course politically since the war and with that he has nothing to do as far as this article is concerned.

HE WAS CERTAINLY A SPLENDID FIGHTER.

There is no rubbing that out. Well, two other leading divisions were in support of the first line in a colored division at intervals, and they met the same fate. Those of them who did not break and seek to run back to their own lines were huddled together in a confused mass within the crater like rats in a pit, while the confederates poured upon the writhing mass a pitiless storm of bullets. They were trapped, for they could neither get back to their own lines nor come forward to surrender, owing to the fierce fire which was maintained by Mahone's men and the confederate batteries. To be it short, the entire well-laid plan had been miserably executed by the federal generals, and had utterly failed, at a cost of over 5,000 men to Gen. Grant's army in killed, wounded and prisoners.

This was the first time that I had seen any colored prisoners. A large number were brought to the provost marshal's office in Petersburg, and it was pitiable to witness the state of terror in which the poor devils were. They no doubt expected to be led out for immediate execution and the blackest of them had turned ash colored from fright, while many of them were

BLUBBERING LIKE WHIPPED SCOOLOYS.

They were immensely relieved when Maj. Bridgeford, the provost marshal, called a fellow with sergeant's stripes on from the line and said to him, "What are you all blubbering about? We are afraid we will be killed," was the reply "Go back," said Bridgeford, "and tell your gang they shall be treated just the same as are the white prisoners." And so they were, but the white prisoners, I must say, were disposed to kick against being put in the same room in the tobacco factory used as a prison with their colored fellow prisoners. They had to swallow the dose, however. Gen. Grant gave us a good rest after this fight, and it will be remembered that the result of it was the resignation of Gen. Burnside and other generals, to whom the execution of the plan had been intrusted.

Economy on the Erie.

N. Y. Correspondence Philadelphia Record. Somehow the high-class employees of the Erie Railroad company do not appear to be particularly economical. They are paid salaries under Jim Fiske, retained them under Hugh J. Jewitt, and are accustomed to find their levelled low under the new president, Mr. King, who set the example at the start of cutting his own pay down from $40,000 a year to $10,000. Some of the experiences of the financially constrained men are given, as they report in the following. Mr. King sent for Mr. Brown, superintendent of ferries. Brown came rattling down in his carriage, and King asked: "Who pays for that vehicle and man?" "The company," was the reply. "Dismiss the man at once and sell the establishment; I will walk and see you. By the way, Mr. Brown, what is your salary?" "Twelve thousand a year," it will be two thousand for the present, Mr. Brown; the company cannot afford to pay more; good day, sir. John N. Abbott, the state general passenger agent, had warning of what was coming, and got a little ahead of President King. King was asked whether the company kept a horse and wagon for him, and was informed that it would be healthier for him to walk. But when Mr. King proposed to cut down his pay from $12,000 to $2,500 Abbott was smart enough to "see him and go him one better" by saying: "Well, Mr. President, if retirement is your policy, I will go in with men with all my heart, and you may make my salary $2,000 a year." The president jumped up and caught the general passenger agent by the hand and thanked him as being the first official who had come over to the side of economy. Whereupon states Mr. Abbott winked only to himself and almost "snickered in a meeting" when Mr. King expressed the hope that his salary would be increased in another year. Abbott is now the only official who smiles; the rest are glum and silent and smoke cheap cigars.

The San Francisco millionaire, Charles Crocker, when first locating his fine residence on California street, desired to purchase one particular lot cutting into his grounds. The owner, however, refused to sell. Mr. Crocker retaliated by building a fence fifty feet high around three sides of the intruding lot. The fence is still pointed out to strangers as a curiosity in metes and bounds.
