LINCOLN, Neb., April 4.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—The closing hours of the legislative session are usually marked by revelry and a general "churn, boys." The grinding out of bills has ceased some time before, and while the legislative body is waiting for them to be brought back by the presiding officer, there are intervals in which no business can be transacted. Believed of the responsibility that has rested on them for three months, the members indulge in bursts of boyish playfulness, and their capers always attract a big audience of spectators.

When the house convened at 5 o'clock tonight the gallery, lobbies and aisles were full of expectant onlookers. The floor was littered with discarded newspapers, abandoned bills and gay public documents. Waste baskets were being heaped with bill files, ink bottles and capsuloids to spend the remainder of their useful careers in ornamenting city offices and county farm houses. Speaker Elder, conscious of his utter inability to manage the session, called on Howe in the chair, without even calling the house to order. The independents, who have not succeeded in enacting any of the important measures, determined to make a form have been hanging their last hope on the Shumway bill. They made one brief, spasmodic effort this afternoon to get it up, but were circumvented by the majority with the rule requiring a two-thirds vote to take up a measure out of its regular order.

At the first adjournment the members moved to go into committee of the whole to consider the usury bill, and after some filibustering it was carried. Ford, Brennan and Green of Omaha, who were the chief opponents, having promised to do so in return for the withdrawal of the independent opposition to the Omaha charter, the majority of the members paid off similar debts in like manner, and Shraders' motion received 60 votes against 31.

Wilson of Lancaster was called to the chair. Cornish took the floor and began a long speech apparently to fill time. There were numerous interruptions to which he made witty retorts, sending the willing crowd into laughing spasms, and an intermittent fire of paper was directed at the speaker.

At 9 o'clock the official timepiece was turned back two hours, and the assembly, here was waving the music of the Irish harp and English unicorn mingling in the legislative hall.

Watson's remarks were evidently a bit of good natured rally, which convinced the auditors. Ford, Dobson and Brennan sprang to their feet to make excited disclaimers, but they only helped the crowd to drown their remarks.

At 10:30 the bill was recommended for passage and in the chair.

The conference committee on the general appropriation bill made its report, and it was adopted. The usury bill was then put on its passage. It received 47 votes against 27 negative. This measure, falling four votes short of a constitutional majority, is the last hope of a usury bill went glimmering.

White, Oakley and Shraders were appointed a committee to notify the governor that the house was about to adjourn. Before the report of a conference committee, the house passed Senator Starbuck's bill prohibiting the selling or giving of firearms to the Indians.

The committee reported that the governor had no communication to make, and brought his thanks for the courtesy shown him by the house.

Speaker Elder took the chair for a few minutes, but the crowd, bound on throwing papers and books and muzzling their neighbors with waste baskets, got away and Church Howe was again called to the chair to restore order. That gentleman scored a sergeant-at-arms for indulging in boyish play and ordered him to quit or leave the hall.

[Shouts of laughter.]

At the close of several bills to be returned for the presiding officer's signature, the speaker was called to his desk. Representative Watson presented him with an artificial arm, on behalf of the house. Representative McKesson presented him, for Mrs. Elder, a fine, handsomely framed crayon of the speaker. The recipient made a feeling acknowledgment and was warmly applauded.

CHANCES FOR MORE PROSPECT WORK.

Famous Lost Breyfogle Mine is in the Belt, but Not Relocated.

PIONEERS FOUND A RICH MINE THERE.

They Suffered from Thirst and Heat and Had to Abandon the Riches Which Were Recently Rediscovered.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 4.—Recent mineral discoveries in that part of Nevada, Nevada, known as Death Valley, have aroused great excitement on the Pacific slope. As already fully described in The Bee it is claimed that the famous Breyfogle mine, which was lost years ago, has been re-located. Whether it is this old legendary mine that has been struck again, or an entirely new find that has been made has provoked much discussion in mining circles. It will take some time evidently to settle the merits of the new discoveries, and the contradictory reports which appear from time to time are not calculated to help the matter. So far no investigation of the original statements has been made which would justify an opinion on the subject one way or the other, while the fact that the district includes the location of the celebrated lost mine known as the Breyfogle heights public interest in the solution of the question involved.

EXPERTS INVESTIGATE. A report which was circulated here that rich ore had been discovered in the Death valley country took several parties into the field. Some of them set out on a prospecting expedition through the district, and a prolonged stay, while others simply made a flying trip, to take in the outlook at a glance and with as much speed as possible. The latter party has returned and made a report. Among the names mentioned are those of Callahan, until recently superintendent of the Diamond D mine of Nevada; Irwin, well known in connection with the Bodie camp, and Brien, an old-time superintendent of the Andes mine. These men made the trip in less than thirteen days, which, as it takes eight days to drive to the camp and return to Daggett, the near railroad point, and thirty-six hours each way in connection with it, is a record. They leave them many hours within which to prospect the new find so as to be able to report authoritatively on the subject. They are all respectable, clear-headed, thorough-going scientists, and as such, what they say must carry weight among mining men, who are not, as a rule, prone to believe in a report. Mr. Irwin said that the country had not yet been prospected sufficiently to enable any one to form any correct idea of the extent of the ore body, but that he had slimmered down to a question of development, with a good prospect to start upon. In his opinion Mr. Irwin said that he has no doubt there will be a camp there.

WHAT THE DISCOVERER SAYS. In an interview with George Montgomery, the original discoverer of the mineral which is attracting so much attention, the following was ascertained: "I was in the left San Andreas, Calaveras county, Cal., last September on a prospecting tour through the Death valley district, taking with me a complete outfit with a pack trail, and a party of four animals. Entered Nevada south of the Carson and struck out towards Walker lake. After leaving Hartwood valley, I struck out at Soda springs and moved west until I struck the Firebug mountains. Here I began prospecting, and took in the whole country for several miles. I found a number of small veins, as they are known by the people there. Sometimes they are called the 'firebug' veins, and at other times they are called the 'red' veins. I found one of these veins, which was about 150 miles in length, north and south. In the northward trip I found little west men, and did not meet with anything to locate until January 9.

"I found some good croppings five miles west of north end of Charleston mountains, from which I got some rock. A party of men was broken from the quartz at one point, which was worth from $5 to $8. The next day I took it out and started out on a prospecting trip for reduction. The whole camp was then moved to Grapevine spring on the west side of the mountain, and systematic prospecting was carried on some time in the surrounding country. As a result I made several other locations, one of which was silver and the rest gold-bearing veins.

PROSPECTORS IN LINE. "Before leaving the camp I directed others to look for veins in the mountains. Some of these I have since been able to open out well in coarse gold. The Young Brothers made one of the locations, and I had a letter last week which said that they had just taken out $25,000 in one shot. I have not made any attempt to boom this find since my arrival and I do not wish to be held responsible for any speculation looking to find gold hanging on grasswood. I am satisfied myself in respect to the district, and have located property to suit myself and propose to solve the question of its value to my own satisfaction. It is quite true that the camp is still only a prospect, and that it will take time and money to open it out at the same time it is what will be very generally admitted a very good prospect."

In conclusion Montgomery remarked that he was unintentional on his part that so much publicity had been given the matter. Anyone who wished information on the subject should call on him at his residence, 1000 Broadway, at the same time he will be very glad to see any of the party who wish to see the mine. He claims, as is in the same belt as the old Breyfogle mine, but he does not believe that it is the same mine that was discovered over forty years ago by Louis Nussbaum, now deceased, an old and respected citizen of Alameda county, and for years a resident of the Livermore valley, says the Chronicle.

In the spring of 1855 Nussbaum left New Jersey bound for the coast. When he reached Salt Lake the train of prairie schooners was 130 in number. Their progress was necessarily slow, and Nussbaum and his other advisers, which were determined to push on to the coast. One of the party, named Smith, declared that he had made the journey before by a short southern route, and offered to lead them to the promised land. They abandoned the wagons and, driving some cattle with them, commenced their fatal journey across the alkali plains. It turned out that either Smith's story was false or he had forgotten his bearings for they soon got their way, and did not follow any definite trail. Their cattle died for want of water, and then their horses were left to their own devices upon the arid, burning, sandy plains of Utah and Nevada.

Abandoning everything but their guns the men struggled on to their inevitable doom. Finding a spring only at rare intervals, and being unable to carry any quantity of water, and not knowing where they were going, they perished in the terrible condition of thirst and lack of nourishment. One by one the weaker of the little band dropped to the ground never to arise again, and their faces were found in the arid, burning, sandy plains of Utah and Nevada.

It is a life time M. Nussbaum often related with great feeling the pathetic and heart-rending incidents of his awful journey. While he could not know the exact time, and those who thus perished met their end like men. Once one of the party, being unable to arise, was left to die, he declaring he could not go another step. A few miles beyond the others came to a spring, filling his canteen, but he was dead, and the ground around him was torn up in his agonizing struggles.

GOLD DAZZLED THEIR EYES. At last all had succumbed to their hardships but Nussbaum and one companion. While wandering about Death valley scarcely knowing or caring where they were going, and borne along by their remarkable vitality and pluck, they discovered a phenomenon which would have made the eyes of the world stare. It was a mine, from which the gold in the outcroppings of rich quartz, glistened brightly in the sun, and it was the shining metal that first caught the weary eyes.

They broke off some rich specimens with their knives and continued their journey over the valley, subsiding only to sleep in the night. They found hills about thirty miles from where they had found the gold. They were rested and eventually struck the Williams river, which is a fine stream. Nussbaum has stated, from which the gold in the outcroppings of rich quartz, glistened brightly in the sun, and it was the shining metal that first caught the weary eyes.

LONDON, April 4.—[New York Herald Cable-Special to The Bee.]—Sir Charles Dike is beginning to weigh like a nightmare on the Gladstonian leader. Having shattered the Irish alliance in defense of domestic purity, now are they to give a certificate of good moral character to the Dike family and the rest of the harem? Dike has retired his own case in a private court and brought in unambiguously a verdict of guilty. This is in every way pleasant than going into the witness box on a regular trial and submitting to cross examination. Dike declined that ordeal, but his pamphlet has now been sent to every member of parliament alleging his complete innocence. Again the question arises, what will Gladstone do, having ordered the district inspector for an offense far less gross than the one which would have received Dike with open arms? It is understood that he has been sounded on the subject and came to the conclusion not to interfere in any way with Dike's candidature for parliament. He holds that he has no right to dictate to the constituency a choice of members, but will not resume his relations with Dike regarding his pamphlet as an answer to the verdict of the sworn jury approved by Justice Hamner. Most of Dike's parliamentary friends look upon his attempt to force his way back with disapproval. The house of commons is not prying but will not stand the presence of a man practically convicted of a grave offense in a court of law. I remember Dike's efforts to hold his ground in the parliament of 1885. He came every day but was cut dead by his fellow members. When he took his seat a place soon cleared on each side, and in the division lobbies and smoking rooms he stood an isolated figure. At last he had to give up and so it would be again.

M'CARTHYITES ARE HIGHLY JUBILANT.

The Sligo Election a Fatal Blow for the Deposed Leader—Gladstone in Much Better Spirits.

LONDON, April 4.—[Special Cablegram to The Bee.]—Mr. Henry Labouchere at a private meeting in London of the radical candidates for members of parliament today declared that the outlook was hopeful. Mr. Parnell, he said, had been beaten in two elections and had sneaked out of his challenge to Mr. Healy, in which he proposed that they should both resign their seats in parliament and come before the people for reelection in the next general election. Mr. Labouchere said that the English revolutionaries were in a state of "highly jubilant" spirits. "Mr. Parnell," said Mr. Labouchere, "will not gain more than six seats in parliament giving at least seventy to the nationalists who support Gladstone."

THE ENGLISH COURT TRIAL. The English court tennis champion, Saunders, won two sets, eight to five and eight to six, in a match which was played on Wednesday the first prize was won by Vicomte de Lays and M. Dupuy Macaron and the second prize was won by M. Clausius Pavre. The receipts for the day were 24,000 francs.

PARLIAMEN GOSSIP. Events that interest and amuse people at the French Capital. [Copyright 1891 by James Gordon Bennett.] PARIS, April 4.—[New York Herald Cable-Special to The Bee.]—A spectacle of Easter is the best demand for spring clothes. It is a day for flowers, however, the boulevards are fortified with both side with a bank of glorious spring blossom flowers, kiosques, resplendent shop windows that so many dream of, floral loveliness of countless designs and unique as well as beautiful. Among them are palanquins, birds of gorgeous plumage, gondolas, terraces and arbors.
