

HOYT'S QUEST FOR PLEASURE.

Experience of a Philadelphia Drummer Seeking the Elephant in Omaha. HE GOT IN WITH A VERY TOUGH GANG. His Money Was Wanted, but His Suspicions Saved His Cash—Story of One Night on a Bender.

Some three months ago James Hoyt, a Philadelphia traveling man, came to Omaha and was seized with a wild desire to put a coat of carmine paint upon the town. He didn't know just how to go at it, so he engaged Pat Hayes, a hackman, to steer him onto some fun.

On the drive out Hoyt noticed a horse and buggy, with a single occupant, following his carriage. This continued for some time, and finally made the commercial tourist so nervous that he ordered a return to the city before the road house was reached.

Upon the return of the party to the city they were directed to the "Crookers," a North Thirtieth street resort. Once inside the trio proceeded to have a fine large time. Champagne flowed like water and Hoyt was rapidly accumulating a good sized jaw.

While the men were arguing the woman quickly picked up her wares and left the house. The "brothers" demanded money and lots of it, but Hoyt swore that he had gone broke when he paid for the last bottle of wine.

As fast as his legs could carry him the drummer made for police headquarters, where he reported the robbery. He had very little information he could give the police beyond the fact that he had been robbed of a wallet containing valuable papers.

The police went to work on the case, and the arrest Tuesday night of Harry Robinson by Officer Houser was the first step toward bringing the guilty parties to justice.

It seems that Hayes and Robinson had put up a job to rob the stranger on the way to the road house, by the return of the carriage balked the game. The alleged milliner was the mistress of Robinson and she lived until yesterday in room 4, of the Anderson block.

It was a well laid plan and it was fortunate for Mr. Hoyt that he did not have his money in the wallet, as cash was what the trio were after.
