Smoke T. D. King & Co's Partagas. No Vacant Houses. Two years ago when every man who owned an unoccupied lot built or started to build a house upon it, with the result that hundreds of residences of all grades were added to the number of the city's homes, the pessimists declared that the growth of the city in this respect had far outgrown its actual growth in population.

They predicted that the result would be harmful for many years. The vacant blocks of vacant houses would stand as a monument to over-enthusiastic enterprise and injure the city by reducing values. It is very gratifying that not one of these predictions has been fulfilled. On the contrary, there have been many houses built this year as in any year of the city's history, and in spite of all this there are fewer vacant houses now than ever before. In fact, a desirable house is almost impossible to find. If this indicates anything it surely indicates a very healthy growth of the city.

NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS

Important Witness in a Robbery Case Escapes from the County Jail.

CORA REED FLEES FROM THE SHERIFF

She Was Held to Testify Against Dutch Boynton and Dick Landon - Sheriff Hazen's Kindness Shamefully Abused by an Ungrateful Girl.

Cora Reed, a girl who has been in the county jail for several weeks past, is missing, and Sheriff Hazen is anxiously awaiting a chance to throw his official lasso over the fair head of his former guest. She was implicated in the robbery of a boy named Mulvany a few weeks ago, and while there was no evidence enough to hold her to the grand jury as a principal, it was apparent that her knowledge of the affair was altogether too valuable to throw away.

As she showed strong symptoms of lighting out as soon as released she was put in confinement in order that she might be on hand when wanted. Dutch Boynton and Dick Landon are now under indictment for the robbery, and it is on her testimony quite largely that the state expects to bring about their conviction. The Reed girl has been given considerable freedom about the jail during the past few days, and she abused the sheriff's kindness by rushing out on Saturday night, while supposed to be engaged in the operation of sweeping the outer corridor. She was waiting for a man on the street, together with a young man who has been very attentive to her wants during her confinement, and the whole outfit now seems to have been scattered up by the sheriff. Sheriff Hazen is confident of capturing her and the young man who assisted her to escape.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE SCHOOLS. The board of school directors hold its regular monthly meeting this evening and among the various reports that will be submitted will be the report of the secretary. This will show some facts of general interest. It will show that the city has in actual use ninety-eight school rooms, in which are employed ninety-six female teachers. The average compensation of the male teachers is $65 per month and the female teachers $43. This includes the salaries of the substitutes, who are all young women, and accounts for the scaling down of the average salary paid to the lady teachers.

The total number of scholars enrolled since last September is 4,001. The average cost per month per pupil is $1.80. The total valuation of the school property is $150,000, and of the apparatus $3,000. The total number of school houses now in use is eighteen. During the year 1892-93 the board has planted twenty-seven shade trees during the year, all that were needed around the new buildings have been completed. The board has complied with the state law requiring the teaching of the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system, and the average school boy has been thoroughly informed of the baleful effect of the deadly cigarette and still smokes them with persevering industry.

The enumeration of school children in the city has not been completed yet, but the report is in the hands of the inspector of the board this evening.

Caught a Coon Man. A man giving his name as C. A. Murray is in the clutches of the city officials on the supposition of being a confidence man, although he will probably be discharged when given a hearing unless the police are more lucky than they have so far been in rustling up evidence against him. With a strong suspicion was his trying to dispose of a check of $40 for $3 in cash to a Lower Broadway merchant. The merchant, who was a bit of a skeptic, called the police and they arrested him. He was taken to the city jail yesterday afternoon. The police are of the opinion that he is a professional confidence man, but as he did not pass the check, which is thought to be worthless, there is no case against him. Murray claims the check is good for its face value.

Later it was learned that Murray tapped the tin on the Colorado house on Lower Broadway kept by Mrs. Jacob Hovart, and stole $6 in cash. Five dollars of the amount was recovered, and he will be required to plead to the charges of larceny from a building in police court this morning.

MISTAKE IN MEDICINE. Rev. E. J. Babcock expected to resume his place in the pulpit of St. Paul's church yesterday morning after a vacation of several weeks, but an accident that happened Saturday afternoon rendered it impossible for him to fulfill his expectations. He had been taking medicine for some throat troubles for several days. On going to take a dose from a bottle he accidentally picked up a bottle which contained a substance which was valuable for some purposes, but not as a throat tonic. It was ammonia, and he took in a large mouthful before he detected his mistake. The alkali burned the inside of his mouth severely, and while his injuries will not be permanent, they were bad enough to render his preaching yesterday an impossibility.

There was a grade stage, and the benches were down in a rapid pit with Mother Earth for a floor. He was worth $100, and two women in the company engaged for $80 and $40. The stock company of the place gathered around a big stove in the middle of the theater, shivering in the cold. They had been sleeping under the stage and on the benches. They did not earn enough money to live at the hotel. Lodging at the hotel cost $12 a week, cocktails cost four bits (50 cents), and she did not have a cent of her bill at the hotel averaged about $33.

The local actors were wofully incompetent—indeed, one of them told Mr. Maguire that "the only thing he could play was corn." The actors of ability, like Maguire, were not to be expected, the actresses received chivalric attentions, but, alas! in this particular the manager every night gambled away the money taken in at the door.

Sometimes during the season, the construction of any electrical machine of that day. This crank turns a ponderous cylinder of glass, which is rubbed by brushes with silk covers. These brushes convey the electricity collected from the cylinder to the positive and negative conductors, supported on large glass pillars, where it can be used for purposes of experiment. The machine is stanchly built, and is capable of producing a powerful electric current like a long. While simple in its construction, it could hardly be improved upon by our wisest electricians. It is especially adapted for the advanced experiments in various fields which Franklin was engaged with at that period of his life.

Max Precht of Astoria has sent to the Oregon commission at the World's fair twenty-one peaches, each of which measured not less than 3 1/2 inches in diameter, the seeds being as small as peas.

Specimens of quartz were shown at Hillsboro, taken from Clearwater creek, a branch of Gales creek, which, to all appearances, is a visit to the hills. Prospecting is now being carried on by Wilcox Bros. and others, and excitement is running high.

The Corvallis Times tells us that so far as heard from, Jesse Brown harvests this year the largest crop of any farmer in that region. He has harvested 2,300 bushels of wheat and 2,300 bushels of oats. John Whitaker's crop of 3,300 bushels averaged thirty-three bushels per acre. It is the best crop ever raised in that region. The rain and the continued improvement of the land by drainage and otherwise, steadily persisted in by Mr. Whitaker.

United States Circuit Judge Gilbert rendered a decision in the case of the United States against the Oregon and California land company, which was the railway company. The case involves title to about 30,000 acres of land on the east side of the Willamette river, which was once included in the grant of the Northern Pacific, that part of the line between Wallula and Portland. After it was forfeited by the best of the Oregon and California land company, it was claimed that it would have been included in their grant had it not previously been granted to the Northern Pacific.

Lumber in Palouse valley has taken a sudden boom during the last few days, owing to the demand for granaries to hold and store wheat. This is the way farmers have been getting out of the embarrassment caused by the scarcity of sawmills.

The Aberdeen cannery is putting up between 300 and 400 cases of salmon per day. They have contracts for twenty-four local boats on the Columbia river boats, but are taking all the fish they can get, paying 25 cents each for silverides and 25 cents for blacks.

Owners of the largest Cour d'Alone mine after, and largest, being interviewed, said he had received a telegram that led had taken a sudden rise and that all the mines in the country were being worked open within a month. This would make a monthly pay roll of $50,000, three-quarters of which would be expended in the state of Washington.

Spokane's new city hall, which was almost completed, was burned yesterday. Lath had been put on preparatory to plastering, and the roof had been put on. The fire started on the fifth floor, presumably from a rat pot being used by plumbers and gas pipes and the fire spread to the interior as in flames. The workmen escaped by jumping, only one being injured.

The city of Port Angeles, in proportion to its size, is the most beautiful city in the country, its unexcelled by any other city on the Sound, says the Tribune-Times. Edison's Achievement Antedated Over a Century by the Old Photographer. The Department of State recently received from B. F. Stevens of the United States dispatch agency at London, an account of historical electrical apparatus once owned by Franklin, which was recently unearthed in that city. Among other things, Mr. Stevens says, he has found that Franklin, during his last sojourn in England, made an electric light, and that he used it without carbon with his primitive appliances sufficient electric light to read by. This antedates the achievements of Edison by more than 100 years. The lamp is in a good state of preservation and has recently been tested by the owner, a gentleman residing near London, who, according to the Boston Herald, finds that it works as satisfactorily now as when Franklin himself experimented with it. It is a curiosity of great value and importance in illustrating the history of electric lighting. It is by no means the arc light or the incandescent lamp of modern times. The principle, however, is that of the arc light, without carbon points, this device, which was invented by Sir Humphrey Davy in 1813—first demonstrating the practicality of electric lighting. The total length of the conductor, which the light is produced, is about twelve inches and the diameter three inches. Each end is provided with attachments for connecting it with the positive and negative poles of the machine, which, it should be remembered, was the only means of generating electricity with which man were then familiar. The electric light in this rude apparatus, but which now looks like a modern one, was produced by the leaping of the intense electric current from the ball to the metallic point. The ends of the tube are partly closed, undoubtedly for the same reason that the globes of the arc lights are closed at present, and the light effect is brilliant and steady. The machine with which Franklin generated the electricity for this novel experiment is turned by a crank, grindstone-like, and is mounted on a wooden base. ROMANCE OF A SIOUX BEAUTY. She Nursed an Army Officer from Wounds Into a Predicament.

One day in writing to a friend, an army officer out west, who is stationed in the Indian Territory, I asked him to send me a photograph of a real Indian beauty. I had to wait a long time, writes Eleanor Waddle in the Chicago Record, but finally he sent me a photograph of the Princess Pretty Voice, saying that she was the only Indian he had ever seen of her type.

I stared at the photograph and wondered how she could. She had a nice name, as if she had just stepped out of a fairy tale, but she looked like a heroine, yet when I read the captain's letter I learned she had really figured in a romance. As I sat gazing at the ugly Indian princess in the photograph, with her small, piglike eyes, nose resembling a potato, coarse horse hair locks and a large mouth, I fell to thinking about the strange way different nations have of regarding beauty.

The Africans admire size and weight above all things else, and the young women feed themselves upon Kouss-kouss in order to become fat and beautiful, while Europeans prefer slender women. A Mongolian beauty must have oblique eyes, thick eyelids, and a bandaged waddling feet, while the Hindus go wild about long, deep eyes, and a belle must be a graceful dancer.

When I had thought these things all over, I unfolded the captain's letter again and read it over and over, and then I read the story of the Indian princess with the long, mysterious earrings.

"She is still quite young," wrote he, "not yet 18, and like all daughters of the forest in the Indian Territory, she has never worn a bang nor French heels, nor stays."

"She cannot discuss deep things, like politics and religion, but she can erect a waterproof tepee which would take a year to make, and she can make a bandage for the World's fair, and in band-aging other such accomplishments as befit the daughter of Big Thunder she cannot be beaten."

"She has never seen a piano, but from jointed, supple-limbed, she can ride on a man's back, and she can dance the brooks and hurl her lances in the sun, and this is as athletic as any your girl, Indian or otherwise, need be."

Then the captain went on to recount a pretty story of his own, and I knew in my circles about the Sioux beauty and a dashing officer.

This officer was a handsome, gallant fellow, a great favorite at the post.

He became very ill when on a detail of some sort, and he was taken to the hospital. He was among the Indians and there was nobody to care for him except the Princess Pretty Voice. She nursed him so well that in a short time he completely recovered.

As a return for her kindness he decided to make a gift of a valuable horse to her father, Big Thunder, knowing that nothing he could give them would be so much appreciated.

But conversation between him and Big Thunder was limited to "How," when they met each other, so he was at a loss as to way to explain to the old chief his reasons for presenting him with his horse. He finally decided to fasten the animal to the stake of Big Thunder's tepee without any explanation at all and go back to his post by the ambulance that morning.

Nobody had told him of the Sioux custom of proposing for marriage by the offer of ponies, so that he did not know that when the old chief took his thoroughbred he considered it an exchange for his daughter's hand. The engagement was announced at once throughout the village and in many neighboring villages. The result was that in a very short while a vast troop of Indian women, in fact, all of Pretty Voice's relatives, came on and invaded the officer's quarters to receive the gifts which they expected him, as a matter of course, to bestow upon them.

Here was another Indian custom of which the officer had never been informed. When it was explained to him just what this vast picnic of squawing squaws expected from him he was scared to death, because he really could not marry Pretty Voice, and yet he could not see exactly how he was going to get out of it, as her relatives had taken such a stand and already regarded him as a bridegroom.

There they sat in silent groups all around his quarters, waiting for him to come out, like Santa Claus, and give them gifts, and at that very time he was engaged to marry a Massachusetts girl away in the east. So finally he called all the female relatives into his house and bestowed upon them necklaces and other such trinkets upon them, and they left in a body to spread abroad his praises throughout the villages for miles around.

Another thing immediately happened, and this was a visit from Big Thunder. He had brought his daughter in state, with much Indian finery displayed, to call upon the man who was to become her husband.

The officer was very polite to them, and treated them to some of his best "fire water" and other refreshments; he really owed his life to the Princess Pretty Voice and he was sincerely grateful, but he realized more than before that he was actually engaged to marry the Indian girl with the full consent of her parents, who were of a warlike and revengeful race, and he quailed in his boots.

A frog has another safeguard against drying up—that is, a kind of interior sack for storing water. Like the camel, it thus keeps a supply which carries it over many a dry place, when it would otherwise lose all its moisture and die. The water is as pure and tasteless as that of any spring.

In Australia, it is said, one species of frog prepares for a drought in a wonderful way. Sometimes the traveler suffering from thirst will come to a bush, and, digging into the ground a foot or two, will find a clay ball. He cracks it open and out jumps a frog! Stranger still, the ball is found a good drink of pure water. And with this the man quenches his thirst.

At Bald rock, sixty miles from Fresno, John Rose killed a grizzly bear which has been roaming about that region for nearly fifteen years and was called "Bigfoot" by miners in that vicinity. It is estimated that he has killed 1,000 sheep in his time and has had many fights with Chinese sheepherders. He carried scars to show it, for when he was cut open seven bullets were found in his chest. They had been fired into him in the past years. He was killed in a canyon and could not be got out, but those who saw him estimated his weight at 2,000 pounds. His hide was a good load for two men to carry out.

Dr. G. C. Osceola, Lowell, Mass. "Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various castor nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Chinchell, Conway, Ark. ALLEN C. SMITH, Pres., Boston, Mass.

Castoria. "Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
