

IN THE HANDS OF THE JURY

Arguments in the Payne Murder Trial Concluded and Case Submitted.

SPECULATION AS TO THE VERDICT

Opposing Attorneys Forget Professional Ethics in Making Their Final Addresses and Are Called Down by the Court—The Judge's Charge.

At 6:15 o'clock last evening the evidence in the case of the state of Nebraska against Sam Payne, charged with the murder of Maud Rubel on the 27th of May last was given to the jury. The case had been on trial for several days and was in many respects sensational. The theory of the defense was that Sam Payne did not commit the murder, but that the crime was committed by Dr. Brown, who was first arrested for the homicide, and that Payne's only part in the case was his disposal of the dead body and jewelry taken from the dead body of the girl, for which service he was paid by Brown. While there was not much testimony in support of this theory other than Payne's evidence on the stand, the defense succeeded in introducing many matters tending to create a doubt of Payne's guilt in the minds of the jurors and when the case was finally submitted last night the impression prevailed that the jury would either fail to agree or return a verdict of manslaughter at the most.

There was nothing startling in the concluding evidence and there was but one break in the testimony offered by the state. It was testified that after he was started for the pen for safe keeping he did not know what he was doing for several days, owing to his state of terror over the manner in which he had been threatened and scared by the police. The cross-examination, however, developed that he was very much alive to the situation. Mr. Kaley succeeded in getting the accused to describe in detail the furniture in the office and rooms. This was the only respect, however, in which Payne's statements were tangled by the cross-examination. In rebuttal the state corroborated each other's statements concerning the giving of the statements and confessions by the prisoner and went over in detail the evidence offered on the stand. The examination, however, was called and told that Payne had given her a pair of earrings and a ring. She kept the ring, but returned the earrings. She also told of having seen Payne burn two blood-covered handkerchiefs in an effort to wash them and she advised him to burn them, as they looked bad. He acted upon her suggestion and burned them in his mother's stove.

When court opened yesterday Judge Scott asked if the attorneys could agree as to the amount of time they wished to consume in their arguments. Both the state and the defendant's attorneys expressed their determination to get through with the arguments as soon as possible, but did not seem willing to place any limit on the time. Judge Scott, in the case for the state and talked for two hours, reviewing the evidence in detail and claiming a verdict on the testimony of murder in the first degree. He was followed by Judge Langdon for the defense, who addressed the jury for two hours. He was followed by Mr. Tuttle, who made an impassioned appeal for his client. The concluding argument for the state was made by Mr. Kaley.

Considerable feeling between the representatives of the state and the defendant's attorneys was manifested in the arguments. In his closing address Mr. Kaley stated that while the counsel and the judge might do their duty if the jury failed to do their duty, anarchy would follow and mob violence would ensue. That was as far as he got for Mr. Tuttle, who on his feet with a strenuous objection which the court sustained.

"Where is the substance of the evidence of the defense?" asked Mr. Kaley, with much vigor. "Here it is, here it is," thundered Mr. Tuttle, waving the alleged confession of Payne in the prosecuting attorney's face. "Take it, take it and explain it to the jury."

The court finally had to insist that the attorneys observe the rules of professional etiquette and cease their personal attacks. Judge Scott's charge to the jury was lengthy and explicit. He dwelt at considerable length upon the question of a reasonable doubt and explained that the jury should have a preponderance of testimony would warrant a verdict in the case in question, the full belief of the guilt of the accused would allow a verdict of guilty.

The jury was told to sleep immediately upon the conclusion of the instructions in the jury room. James Gets One and Amanda Two. Judge Baxter has decided the family trouble between James Gladwin and his former wife, Mrs. Amanda Leach, which was a fight for the possession of three children. The court has decided that the youngest girl, Mamie, shall be given to the custody of Mr. Gladwin, while Grace and the other child remain with their mother, who has been appointed their guardian.

The case was on trial for several days and grew matter as it proceeded. Finally the line was drawn on the admission of any further evidence showing the former character of either the father or mother of the children. In passing upon the case Judge Baxter stated that there had been abundant evidence to show that in the past both the father and mother of the children had been questionable guardians, but that the evidence was that both were now proper persons for the care of the girls and he made the ruling. This does not change the makeup of the families, as Mamie has been with her father for five years, while Mrs. Leach has had possession of the other girls. The decision, however, makes the arrangement permanent and stops the fight for the children, which has been going on for several years and has brought them and their parents into very unenviable notoriety.

FOREGOES ALL ITS CLAIMS. What the Government Gives Up in the Benson Compromise. SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 28.—By the terms of the compromise in the Benson case the government foregoes all its claims for damages, and the Nevada bank and Henry Pierce, the capitalist, will be able to collect something like $300,000 from the United States.

There are two branches of the Benson case, the criminal and the civil. It is only the latter that has been compromised, but standing in the background of the case the officers of the government this will have an effect on the criminal prosecution. When the frauds were exposed in 1884 and 1885 Benson had earned $1,000,000 from the work of deputy surveyors, and he held further claims of nearly $200,000. The government will hold all of the surveys and refuse payment. Civil suits for recovery of $300,000 were begun and judgments were found against Benson and his partners. The claims held by Benson and his partners were found against the Nevada bank and Dr. Pierce. The aggregate amount was $300,000, of which the bank holds claims for $200,000 and the capitalists for $100,000.

IN MANY CASES THE SICK FIND THE REMEDY WORSE THAN THE DISEASE.

This is especially true when applied to the usual preparations of cod liver oil. The dose is nauseating, and the weakened stomach cannot retain, much less digest it. Unlike all other preparations of cod liver oil is Slucum's OZONIZED EMULSION of Norwegian Cod Liver Oil, with GUAIACOL. It's life-giving ingredients render it palatable and pleasant to take. The most delicate stomach retains and digests it. Its ozone supplies the oxygen necessary in digestion, while the Guaiaacol increases the secretion of gastric juice, prevents fermentation, stimulates the appetite and destroys the poisonous bacteria present in all wasting diseases. The kind physicians prescribe.
