Condemned was yesterday of the actions of two colts who have no fear of motor cars in their hearts. They have a tantalizing way of stationing themselves on the car tracks and when the car approaches and Thirty-fifth street and standing there coyly until the motorman gets off and drives them away with a stick. This has delayed the trains somewhat and been the cause of the motormen even more. The owner of the animals was notified that if he does not keep them from home he will be responsible for the consequences.

All the indications point to "Powhatan," the comic opera to be given at the New Dohany 18th and 19th, being as much of a success as the one given at the same place last year. The management promised when the opera was first arranged. The woman's Christian association is now in getting many of the more energetic ladies of Council Bluffs musicians and piano players to assist, and while the time allotted to prepare the opera is being used, rehearsals went on, marked with enough vim and vigor to show that the work being well in hand. Mr. W. C. Baker, the director, is indefatigable, and from early in the morning he has been directing the chorus, or the ballet of little folk.

Mr. Eugene Allen, who sings the title role in the comic opera, is well adapted naturally, for the part he has to fill, which requires an element of dignity that no one else in the city could give. Mr. Allen's "Powhatan" has a smooth face, and Mr. Allen's characteristic moustache was lost about a week ago.

Mrs. Simons, as Pocahontas, and Miss Besie Stewart, as Laughing Star, are a couple of "Powhatan's" extremely interesting young actresses. The libretto has taken a good deal of time to write, and it is not until the plot, but no one cares for history in a light opera, except perhaps Mr. J. H. Simons, who is the author of the opera. Misses John Smith, Simons, and an amateur on the boards of his native "earth preceded him to this country, and his friends are now in the city, and his friends are now in the city, and his friends are now in the city.

The blood-curdling rumors of a murder committed in the Royal Arcanum parlors upon investigation proved to have been started by a belated article in the Standard, "Powhatan" practicing their Indian war whoop.

See Hive on Fire. Mrs. Griffith's house at 309 East Pierce street, commonly known as the "Bee Hive," was the scene of a small blaze yesterday morning. The garage is packed full of every sort of bric-a-brac from a toothpick to a barrel, and the fire, which started in the kitchen, had originated from spontaneous combustion, as it was located directly under the west wall of the building. The damage amounted to about $125. The excitement caused was much greater than the damage would indicate, however, for there are a number of families in the building. When the alarm was sounded the widows and the families commenced to emerge in squads and rattles from the rooms, and the fire department commenced to hurl cabinet organs and secretaries through the windows. Some of the little children were seen to be in the street, and the fire department commenced to hurl cabinet organs and secretaries through the windows. the people of Council Bluffs had turned out as they would have done at the last financial success. As it is, we are 400 in the hole. On each day the proportion was about evenly divided between the people in the audience, and those who were in the hole. Freemasonry Saved Him. An Army Officer Who Had an Emblem Tattooed on His Breast. An interesting story of the universality of Freemasonry, says the Washington Post, was told by a party of friends yesterday by a retired army officer, who was long stationed in the west. In the early part of the 70s Major Avery was captured by a band of Sitting Bull's warriors, who proceeded to have a Roman holiday by roasting him at the stake. Preliminary to this prospective barbecue, while the major was tied to a stake with the faggots all around him ready to be ignited, he threw a small object, which he had hidden in his breast, directly at Avery's head and body, just to see how near they would come. The object was a small piece of his ear or some other redundant portion of his anatomy.
