These who think Dreyfus will be released in October, because the five years on Devil's Island will wipe out the present sentence, saw in the fact that he was sentenced for exactly ten years a confirmation of their view. But they are mistaken. He was sentenced to ten years, not because that is double his time on Devil's Island, as they suppose, according to the law, but because of the nature of his crime. Had the verdict been acquittal, he would have been sentenced to two years, but because the two judges voted in his favor for a conviction of his innocence. The present procedure is the application for revision, signed by Dreyfus today. It will be sent to Paris. The clerk of the court-martial must send a complete dossier of the trial, including all the documents submitted. A reporter will be appointed to examine it minutely and ascertain whether there be any flaw in the proceedings. The result will be submitted to the court of revision, which will maintain or annul the sentence.

An interesting fact developed today is that the police had taken every precaution to get Dreyfus safely out of Rennes in the event of acquittal, in which case it was agreed there would have been serious disorder and probably an attempt on his life. The police had arranged to conduct him back to the military prison after the verdict with the same precautions as at the trial. He was to have been given civilian attire and a false beard and then to have left the prison by the small door of the recruiting office leading to the Avenue de la Gare. No one was to expect him to leave. The building which is attached to the military prison, and thanks to the disguise the police hoped he would reach the station safely, where a special train was waiting to rush him off before the crowd could have heard of his leaving prison.

News of the verdict was awaited with keen interest by the French colony in London. When announced it was received with enthusiasm in the French cafes in Soho amid cries of "Vive France" and "Vive Jules." French men and women came out in the streets and congratulated one another, dancing and madly gesticulating. A party of Jews came into collision with Frenchmen in Soho and a free fight followed which stopped by the police. The disturbance might have resulted but for the foresight of the police, who had stationed special constables in the foreign quarter beforehand.

All the Sunday papers speak strongly in condemnation of the verdict. The Observer says: "The meaning of the verdict is simply this: A majority of the court-martial, driven to choose between condemning Dreyfus and condemning the general staff, have sided with their superiors. The first court-martial, misled by the forger, Henry; by the lunatic Bertillon; and by the fraudulent Merlier, and knowing nothing whatever of the part played by Esterhazy, condemned an innocent man and murdered the honor of our country, knowing everything, without even a fact tending to create a legitimate suspicion, condemns him again by a majority of five to two. This is the view the whole civilized world will take. A new sentence is passed upon the innocent man for ten years' imprisonment for the crime of being a Jew, for the crime of having survived five years of torture already, for the crime of having proved Merlier to be a villain. It is for the glory of justice in France to fight on. They cannot acquiesce in a crime which threatens to banish France from the comity of civilized nations."

The Sunday Times says: "We are disposed to think that not only the members of the court-martial who voted for acquittal, but probably the whole court, would have been glad to acquit Dreyfus, but they feared the result on the army and to themselves. They could not resist the pressure of the wish of their superiors and we are not surprised at the scheme falling entirely, the disposition on all sides being to acquit the prisoner by degrees. The court-martial has simply bowed its neck to the army's wish. It is all probable that the verdict will stand."
