SECRETARY ROOT IN OMAHA

Inspects Fort Crook and Territories Briefly in the City.

NO CHANGES TO BE MADE HERE

War Secretary is Well Pleased with Local Surroundings, but is Inclined to Favor Fort Riley Above Other Western Posts.

Ellihu Root, secretary of war, arrived in Omaha yesterday morning about 9:30 o'clock and left for Des Moines over the Rock Island at 11:15.

The party consisted of Secretary Root, General George Gillispie, chief of the engineering corps, Colonel Wallace Randolph, chief of the artillery corps, Colonel W. H. Carter, acting adjutant general, General H. C. Merriam, commander of the Department of the Missouri, Captain James B. Erwin, acting judge advocate of the department, and the party at St. Louis and accompanied it to Omaha.

According to the statements of Secretary Root there is little hope for Omaha securing the improvements in the military reservations near this city which the people desire and which the importance of the city and its geographical location warrant.

Favors Fort Riley. The secretary stated positively that Fort Riley has been settled upon as the site of the camp of instruction for the troops in the Department of the Missouri; that Fort Crook would not be enlarged to accommodate a regiment of twelve companies at this time and that Fort Omaha would not be utilized by the department. He also said that Kansas City's efforts to secure the headquarters of the Department of the Missouri amount to nothing.

Secretary Root reached Fort Crook at 6:55 a. m. yesterday, where the party inspected the post in company with the regimental and post officers the members drove over the grounds and passed through the buildings. About 8:30 the members returned to the train and were brought to Omaha by a special which left the city over the Missouri Pacific at 7:30 for that purpose. The early hour of arrival at Fort Crook found the party without breakfast and that meal was eaten between Fort Crook and South Omaha.

Secretary Root Talks. Speaking of his trip through the west, the secretary said: "This trip was made by me for the purpose of ascertaining personally the condition of the posts and the number of men they can accommodate. You can read exact reports forever in an office and get none of the information in a personal sense which five minutes' inspection of the ground will bring. We are expecting to have to provide places for an increased number of soldiers as they are withdrawn from the Philippines and the other islands. The department desires to know where they may be placed to the best advantage. This is really the reason for the trip, but it also has some reference to my idea of massing the troops as much as possible. It is the policy of the department to keep the troops together in larger bodies, so that at least the regimental formation may be preserved, and to have these posts in positions where the men can, without much trouble and expense be brought together in brigades and divisions. In pursuance of this idea there has been a suggestion that the one-company posts be abandoned. We have taken no action in the matter, although in time this will probably be done.

Review of Itinerary. "On this trip I have visited Jefferson Barracks, Fort Leavenworth, Riley and Crook and will visit the site of the new fort at Des Moines. Riley is a magnificent fort in every respect. At Crook I was much impressed with the surrounding country. I never expected to find such rich soil and such fine crops of grain.

As to the probability of improvements and development of the property of the War department around Omaha, the secretary said: "I do not think any important changes will be made at Crook shortly. At the present time it is in shape to accommodate a battalion under the present organization of the army, with officers' quarters for two battalions. There is but one company there now, but it is probable that in a short time three other companies will be sent there. The post will probably some time be made a regimental post, but not right away.

"Fort Omaha? Well, we have considered nothing in regard to it. I understand that Fort Crook was intended to supersede Fort Omaha and that that reservation was to be abandoned. There would be little use in having two posts so close together as Fort Omaha and Fort Crook, so I can see little use that the government can have for the old post.

Asked whether it might not be utilized as the site for the camp of instruction authorized under the recent act of congress, the secretary replied: "For this part of the country Fort Riley offers the best location for this camp. The reservation consists of 20,000 acres and every facility is offered for the handling of troops in large bodies.

"There has been no consideration given the suggestion of residents of Kansas City to the effect that the headquarters of the Department of the Missouri be moved from Omaha to Kansas City. In fact we have no information in a definite sense upon the effort of Kansas City to secure the removal.

Arriving at Omaha the party was met by Major R. E. L. Michie and Colonel John W. Pullman, the acting adjutant general and the quartermaster general of the department, respectively. Three ambulances from the depot had been provided and in them the party went to Fort Omaha, where they drove through the grounds and inspected the buildings. From the fort they returned to the army building, where an inspection was made, the secretary expressing gratification at the appearance of convenience manifest at the headquarters. Here the party was met by Senator Millard, who was with the secretary from that time until he left the city. The senator and secretary

NEBRASKA SHARES ITS HAY

Kansas and Missouri Ask Their Neighbor State for Fodder.

EXCELLENT GRAZING IN WESTERN KANSAS

Eastern End of the State Confesses Itself Dependent Upon Districts Formerly Depleted as Drouth-stricken.

Seasonable Fashions

Nebraska hay is being shipped in large quantities to Kansas and Missouri. Tardy rains have done a good deal for the pasturing in the eastern end of the Sunflower state and all over Missouri, and they have been sufficient to re-animate the corn to a certain extent, but they could not save the hay. This was burned down in a crisp the ground days ago, and as a consequence the two states named are hard pressed for feed of that description. In their extremity these states have turned to Nebraska for aid. All connecting railroads are now shipping hay south from here in varying amounts. The movement is extensive and is certain to continue. Hay is $20 a ton in Kansas City, and there is practically none left in Missouri. Most of the early orders have come from that state. This traffic began about a week ago, and is growing daily heavier. The first order received by the Elkhorn for such a shipment was four days ago. It called for fifty carloads of hay in Kansas City immediately. That means 500 tons, which is considerable of a starter. Just what proportion of the hay trade Kansas will assume cannot be told yet. There is one mitigating feature in that state which will help to cut down its demands along this line. That is the fact that the eastern western end is one vast pasture of the richest kind. Grazing in western Kansas is better this year than ever before, and there is more than enough for all the cattle out there. Cattle Seek for Grass. Stockraisers in the eastern part of the state are aware of this, and have already begun to take advantage of the condition. They are loading their herds and flocks on the cars as rapidly as possible and shipping them out to western Kansas on the abundant pasturage. Many of them are in such a hurry that they do not even take the precaution to get a location in advance. They get their stock out there and then hunt along the line until they find an opening. This strange movement from one end of
