Hot Weather Fun

There's a Humorous Side if You Can Only See It.

There is a funny side to this hot weather and the man who is able to see it is in no immediate danger of prostration. It is worry that kills rather than heat.

There are a lot of things worse than hot weather—a bolt under your arm, for instance, or a stone bruise on your heat heel.

There's happiness in the thought that every householder, whether rich or poor, lives in a place where heat is furnished free and is not charged for it.

One day last week when the weather had reached a temperature like unto that of a scorned woman, the coroner received a mysterious call. In a vague sort of way he was given to understand that somebody, somewhere, had committed suicide.

There is an ancient theory that Weiss beer will not make the drunk come unless it is mixed with some stronger drink.

No gin fix for him. No gin rick, nor mint julep, either. He had started out to get drunk and he wouldn't get drunk.

There's a man out on West Farnam street who has some interesting figures on the cost of being a genuine summer man.

These present were: Misses Allie Hommel, Leola Cox, Helen Meyer, Beatrice Nicoll, Corolla Melchior, Messrs. Cyril Stevens, Allan Wagner, Adolf Meyer and Max Huberman.

WEST POINT, Neb., July 27.—(Special.)—James H. Gallen, who was sheriff of Cummins county for 18 years, died at 4 o'clock this morning of his daughter at Wisner and was buried there yesterday.

WEST POINT, Neb., July 27.—(Special.)—Joseph C. Eberhart, 51 years of age, an old resident and one of the best-known in the city, died at his home in this city today.

PLATTSBROUGH, Neb., July 27.—(Special.)—Mrs. E. P. Rockwood, 81 years of age, an old resident and one of the best-known in the city, died at her home in this city today.

It also occurred to his wife that his linen suits had no vests and this would make it necessary for her husband to have a large number of soft shirts.

The summer man prepared to make his debut in linen and found that his half hose were not the sort that looks best above a glossy low shoe of patent leather.

Other men wore no coats, so the economical wife suggested that her husband lay aside the linen coats whose fit pleased him so ill.

Before many days the man read in the newspapers that only elevator boys and bootblacks were wearing shirtwaists.

A spinster who has arrived at that age where she regards men and mice as being about on a par was walking two or three blocks from her home one evening last week, accompanied by a younger woman whose fear of men is not so pronounced.

Just as he was about to meet the women he threw both arms upward and forward in a frantic endeavor to keep the cuffs of his shirtwaist from expanding over his finger tips.

"No, not wet; icicles are dangerous in comparison with hot weather." And that held her for a while.

City Treasurer Levies on a Tombstone Shop for Delinquent Taxes. TURNS THE TABLES ON A JOKER

Man with the Van Has Monuments Enough to Stock a Densely Populated Gray-and-Red and Theirs on His Bargain Counter.

City Treasurer A. H. Hennings will be collecting taxes from dead men next. He levied upon a tombstone factory yesterday and has an entire family of monuments which he will sell at reduced rates.

There are baby tombstones and tombstones for adults in the treasurer's catch. Shirts surmounted by angels and pedestals embellished with German, French, Bohemian and other inscriptions are in the possession of Mr. Hennings.

THE GRESHAM WARES are the property of A. Baumeister, who has a factory at the corner of Eighteenth and Charles streets. Ten years' taxes, amounting to $150, stand against the tombstones of all nations.

Mr. Baumeister had no faith in the old adage that man can't escape death and the tax collector. For nine long years city treasurers did not have the courage to levy on shafts which proclaim the virtues of the dead.

Mr. Hennings' early training was good. Obedience is thoroughly ingrained into his nature. He complied with Baumeister's request and selected not one tombstone but a score of them, for the windowless palace of death in which the monument man suggests he will end his political career.

Automobile is Suggested. The city should buy an automobile for Mr. Hennings," City Comptroller John N. Vestergaard has suggested with Baumeister's request and selected not one tombstone but a score of them, for the windowless palace of death in which the monument man suggests he will end his political career.
