On the American side of the line there is a detachment of sixty regulars at Tia Juana, Cal., and eighty regulars at Tecate. BERLIN FOLK SKATE ON SALT

Rev. Upskeep Low, as Wear of Chemical Surface is Less Than that of Ice.

Nature has not been conquered once more. Men can skate, not on ice, but on salt. A salt-skiing rink, constructed by the patented process of Dr. Ed. Arnold, was recently exhibited and operated in Berlin.

All skaters will welcome the invention of a method of producing, by purely chemical means and without the employment of a costly refrigerating process, a saline crystalline mass which exhibits all the characteristic properties of ice.

The surface of the mass can scarcely be distinguished from a surface of natural or artificial ice, and the resemblance is increased by the fact that the skaters produced by the skates have all the appearance of snow. The mass is entirely odorless and contains no ingredient injurious to the health or the clothing of the skaters.

The mass can be applied to any light floor of wood, cement, or asphalt, from which it can easily be removed by chipping or steaming, writes Walter Leendahl, in the Scientific American. It is preferable to construct the skating floor in a building, but it may be installed in the open air, if it is protected from rain, drying winds, summer heat, and direct sunshine by a shed, tent, or other covering.

Boards can be coated with the mass and can be quickly assembled to form floors of any desired size, which can be taken apart as quickly. In this way temporary skating floors can readily be introduced on the stage and in public or private festivals, indoors or in the open air. Slides for coasting can be constructed by a similar method.

The cost of construction and maintenance of a salt-skiing rink are moderate. The construction is very simple. The mass is melted and poured on the floor, where it quickly solidifies and forms a hard, smooth surface. It is applied in successive layers, each less than one-twenty-fifth inch thick. The cost of upkeep is small, for the "mass" is less than that of ice, especially at low temperatures, and the abraded "snow" is collected, melted with fresh material, and used again. The mass taken from old skating boards or rinks can be utilized in the same manner. The quantity required for a single layer is less than one-fifth pound per square foot. A fresh layer must be applied from time to time, with a frequency proportional to the use of the rink. Two applications per week usually suffice. A surface of 1,000 square feet can be kept in condition by three hours' daily work of one attendant, in addition to occasional sweeping.

During an exhibition which was recently held in the exhibition building of the Berlin "Zoo" a demountable skating surface composed of wooden planks was used very largely and its durability was thoroughly demonstrated.—New York Post.

GETTING OUT OF SHADOWS

Another of New York's Newspapers Planning to Purchase Park Row.

One by one New York's newspapers have quit the semi-circle of the city hall and moved uptown to newer quarters. In years past all the newspapers of the metropolis fronted on Park Row or on intersecting streets. Now all but three—the World, the Tribune and the Sun—have moved away, leaving these aged vehicles of news and opinion like watchmen guarding the famous stamping ground. The Sun is planning to leave the old quarters, a dingy, low-browed building, and set away from the shadows of the towers of the World and the Tribune.

Many historic memories cling to the Sun building, a five-story red brick structure on a lot seventy-five feet square, at Park Row and Frankfort street. It was built more than 100 years ago as the headquarters of the Tam-

Another of New York's newspapers planning to purchase Park Row.

One by one New York's newspapers have quit the semi-circle of the city hall and moved uptown to newer quarters.

In years past all the newspapers of the metropolis fronted on Park Row or on intersecting streets.

Now all but three—the World, the Tribune and the Sun—have moved away, leaving these aged vehicles of news and opinion like watchmen guarding the famous stamping ground.

The Sun is planning to leave the old quarters, a dingy, low-browed building, and set away from the shadows of the towers of the World and the Tribune.

Many historic memories cling to the Sun building, a five-story red brick structure on a lot seventy-five feet square, at Park Row and Frankfort street.

It was built more than 100 years ago as the headquarters of the Tammeeting of the stockholders of the Sun Printing and Publishing association, by W. C. Reick, president, to consider the sale or mortgaging of the Sun building and the acquisition of another building.

The war of 1812 was on at the time the old building was finished. As one of the finest buildings in old New York and the most important political headquarters in the city, it became the scene of the most important social functions of the city.

Up one flight of stairs was the great hall where the Tammany men in Indian dress held their meetings. It was in this hall that New York society gathered to do honor to the returning naval heroes of the war of 1812.

Decatur and Bainbridge were the city's guests in what is now the new room of the Evening Sun. It was in this place, too, that the great reception in honor of Lafayette was held in 1824, when he visited this country at the unanimous request of congress. Scott and Taylor were guests of New York there after the Mexican war.

The three upper stories of the building were used for hotel purposes. On the ground floor beneath the hall was a bar-room, which was filled nightly with politicians. The Bucktails of Tammany, who opposed De Witt Clinton, gathered there and sang the anthem:

There's a barrel of porter in Tammany Hall. And the Bucktails are swigging it all night long.

In the days of my boyhood 'twas pleasant to call for a seat and cigar midst the jovial throng.

John Jacob Astor stationed boys on the steps at every Tammany meeting to sell the bucktails, which the opponents of Clinton were in their hats.
