

MARKET CONGRESS TALKS OF SELF HELP

Sir Horace Plunkett Describes Results Attained by Hundred Thousand Irish Farmers.

STATE AID OF LAND PURCHASE

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—Declaring that America should launch a citizenship movement for the organization among farmers of self-help, the Right Honorable Sir Horace Plunkett, K. C. V. O., of Dublin, Ireland, tonight addressed the opening session of the Third National Conference of Marketing and Farm Credits, speaking to delegates from forty states.

The speaker came across the ocean to address it as the first of a series of talks and conferences that he will hold throughout the United States, with the end in view of organizing American agriculture. He was the first minister of agriculture of Ireland and called the "father of the Irish co-operative movement," which has under its wings 105,000 Irish farmers organized into 1,000 co-operative societies.

Weak Spot in Rural Economies. He described the weak spot in American rural economies as being a lack of business organization among farmers. He dwelt upon the chaotic conditions that accompany the marketing of farmers' products and the purchasing of farmers' supplies. He showed how the cities of America and other nations have been developed at the expense of the countryside. He declared the time is ripe for all public spirited persons to interest themselves in the fundamental development of agriculture.

"They must get together," he said. "They must eliminate waste or America will fall behind more competent nations." "Allow me to utter the warning which will have to be faced in the United States and Canada, as well as in the United Kingdom, in France, in Germany and in other countries," he continued. "This relates to the very vital problem of co-operative finance, both what is called 'long term' or 'real credit,' and 'short term' or 'personal credit.' Finance is, indeed, a vital part of the co-operative program.

"There is nothing more vital for the co-operative movement than that it should clearly sound also a note of self-help. Looking not only to the future of America, but at the movement in the old world today, thus I see astra the depths of my feelings, that while the state must give its aid to the co-operative movement, it must seek to obtain for it the greatest possible freedom.

State Aid of Land Purchase. How the best real estate deal in the history of the world was consummated by the British government buying out the Irish landlords and reselling the property to the tenants was told by Secretary Charles W. Holman of the National Conference on Marketing and Farm Credits to that body, in session here.

"In state aid of land purchase," he said, "the immediate hope of the American farmer is that by means only can we hope for a quick action to step the growing tide of landlordism."

Secretary Holman credited state-aided land purchase in Ireland with these benefits: "The industry of occupiers has increased; farm houses and farm outbuildings have improved; the tendency to sell interests in land has decreased; the tendency to sublet and divide holdings has become almost dormant; the advocacy of the occupiers has improved; there is a feeling of contentment, a prevalence of law and order that did not exist under landlord and tenant relations.

Tenancy on the Increase. "What a contrast this affords against the American movement toward tenancy," the speaker said. "In Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania tenant farmers have increased by 121,167, while the number of home owning farmers has actually decreased by 62,918. But in Texas and Oklahoma we find about the saddest disillusionment of American hopes for home ownership. Forty years ago Texas had 65,468 tenant families. That number comprised 37.6 per cent of all the farms in the state. In 1910 the tenant farmers had increased to 239,971, which made 53 per cent of all the farms in the state.

"In Oklahoma 54.4 per cent of the state is in the hands of tenant farmers, and in the forty-seven counties where tenancy is highest the percentage runs to 62.3."

"If we take the twenty-five most prosperous states of the union—the states that produce the greater part of the cotton, corn, dairy products, wheat and the fruit stuffs of the nation—we may easily estimate 2,400,000 homeless families who have not survived the competitive pressure for land ownership. In these same states the concentration of land ownership is progressing at a speed that is no less than tragic.

Question Cannot Be Evaded. "In the southwestern states the rate of tenant increase over the home owning increase is two to one. In the middle western states of Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Ohio and Iowa tenants are becoming more numerous than home owners.

"America cannot evade this growing land question. The American people must recognize that ours is the last of the first-class countries to recognize the need of fixing upon a sound land policy. How to redistribute the population upon the land, how to care for the incoming immigrants, how to readjust the relation of city to country must be the great issues of the immediate future."

Results in Wisconsin. Charles A. Lyman, chairman of the legislative committee of the Wisconsin Society of Equity, in his address described the agricultural co-operative movement in Wisconsin as a movement of the masses. He said in part:

"Average farming conditions must be improved at the same time that we are providing for those who can now avail themselves of the teachings of science. After all the welfare of the masses is what constitutes the welfare of the state.

"When the farmer has learned to conduct the business of farming successfully through his co-operative society and organization he is then more ready and willing to accept the teachings of science, and to appreciate the value of the agricultural colleges. Brought into the co-operative movement because of his immediate need for a way to make or to save an additional dollar he has been taught many things about business methods, and he is generally more ready and better equipped to apply what agricultural science has to offer and to succeed in the business world."

POWDER BLAST KILLS THIRTY IN DUPONT WORKS

driver; Hanrahan, a carpenter; Pleasonton, a fireman, and Oliver, a machinist. The work of gathering up what was left of the dead was a gruesome task. Baskets and boxes were employed for this purpose and the men searched the grounds for bits of flesh as though they were picking mushrooms. Some climbed trees and brought down other parts of humans and pieces of clothing.

The Pellet packing house was a one-story frame building, 18x30 feet, and was divided into six rooms. Not a single part of it was to be found. Nearby buildings were badly damaged. A fence was blown away and telegraph and telephone wires which were strung near the scene of the explosion were ripped from their fastenings. Company officials said there was about 5,000 pounds of powder in the packing house at the time. The property loss, Dupont officials said, was small.

The men injured were outside the plant. They were struck by bits of machinery, flying bodies, rocks and other debris. One or two had eyes blown out and several lost an arm or leg. Physicians stated they were so badly injured that not one of them is expected to survive.

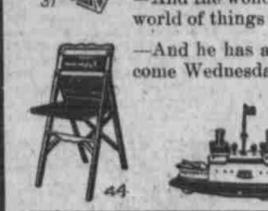

Sparks, No. 1. The cause. One theory advanced by workmen at the yard is that the explosion may have originated in a spark from a hot engine or from a spark caused by a small car running over some spilled powder. A workman said that just before the explosion occurred a car in which there were several thousand pounds of black powder had been drawn by two horses along a narrow gauge track to the entrance of the packing house to be prepared for shipment. The powder is packed into boxes holding about fifty pounds each. Some of the powder, it was said, may have been spilled from the car. Either a horse or the wheel of a car could have ignited the stuff and caused a flash to reach the powder in the can exploding it and the powder in the house. The list of killed was given out as follows:

The varying fortunes which have attended General Townsend's Mesopotamian positions have not yet been recorded here in sufficient detail to make the situation entirely clear. From the latest official statement it does not appear that there has been any further fighting since the British advance upon the battlefield of Ctesiphon, but the British troops have fallen back to the Tigris, having been outnumbered by the Turks, and are now occupying more positions in the rear of the former line.

Greece Insists on Neutrality. LONDON, Nov. 30.—The basis of Greece's reply is a neutrality which will continue benevolent to the extent so long as the sovereignty rights of Greece are not infringed and no restrictions of a military character are imposed," telegraphs the Athens correspondent of Reuters' Telegraph company.

"Greece argues that with Saloniki and its railway communications in the hands of the allies, Greek forces will be deprived of their only adequate provisioning base. There is no indication that the entente will modify its original demands, but both the government and diplomats are hopeful of a satisfactory result."
