A FIGHT FOR LIBERTY.

Tragic Incident of Life in the Unhappy Land of the Caar.
The chief of gendarmerie of the Tobolsk government has sent to the central authorities at St. Petersburg a full report of the desperate attempt at escape made early in October by a convoy of prisoners who had been halted in the village of Kutarbitchka.

The convoy numbered thirty-three prisoners, of whom four were "political." They were being marched from Tuman to Tobolsk, the escort consisting of eighteen soldiers of the Ninth Siberian reserve regiment, commanded by a noncommissioned officer. Kutarbitchka consists of one long street, at the end of which is a large isolated building, where passing convoys of prisoners are lodged for the night. The convicts had behaved exemplarily during the march to Kutarbitchka, and their guards had no suspicion that an outbreak had been planned and all the details arranged. The prisoners were put into two rooms, the escort occupying two other apartments, with one sentinel in the corridor and another outside the building, which is surrounded by a high wooden wall. At 10 o'clock all was quiet in the prison.

Some of the soldiers were drinking tea, while the others had already settled down for the night. A few remarks were exchanged between the prisoners in the two rooms, but, being in Yiddish, they were not understood by the sentinel in the corridor. Then "One, two, three!" rang out sharply and distinctly, and the prisoners in both rooms burst open the doors and rushed pell-mell into the corridor. The sentinel shouted the alarm, and within a few seconds the soldiers of the escort were massed in the passage, where a furious fight ensued for the carbines stacked at the farther end.

The prisoners managed to secure some of these weapons and strove to come to close quarters with the soldiers, who were soon pouring a devastating fire into their ranks. The greater part of the fight took place in complete darkness, as the lamps were shattered by carbine bullets. About twenty of the prisoners were killed or wounded in the corridor. The remainder succeeded in escaping from the building. Three were shot by the sentinel outside.

The handful who survived, hampered though they were by the chains on their feet, clambered up the wooden wall and made for the neighboring forests. One of these men, who carried a carbine, was struggling to get over the wall when a soldier ran toward him and addressing him as "comrade" offered to hold the carbine for a moment. The prisoner, believing him to be a fellow refugee, dropped the carbine to him, and the soldier thereupon bayoneted him to death.

Another soldier armed himself with a bar of iron and killed one of the convicts, whom he struck with such force that the latter had a hand completely severed from the arm. In all eleven prisoners escaped, with nine carbines and sixty cartridges. Three were recaptured the following morning, and five carbines were recovered.

The noncommissioned officer in charge of the escort seems to have acted with great presence of mind and courage in the face of the unexpected attack.

The six casualties among the soldiers were all bayonet wounds. Five were of a slight character, but the sixth ended fatally. Twenty-two of the convicts were killed.—Baltimore Sun.

How He Made It Up.
Clark Williams, New York's superintendent of banks, said the other day of a bankrupt:
"It is no wonder the poor fellow went under. When it became necessary for him to borrow, the securities that he offered were quite worthless. This fact was pointed out to him, and he produced other bundles of securities less valuable if possible than the first lot."
Mr. Williams laughed.
"He reminded me," he said, "of a waiter whom I heard about the other day. His waiter was summoned angrily by a guest.
"Look here, waiter," the guest grumbled, "these oysters that you have brought me are bad."
"I know that, sir," the waiter answered, "but we have given you three more than you ordered to make up for it."

A Mantle With a History.
In the windows of a silk and lace shop at The Hague there was displayed a few weeks ago a mantle with a history. Of finest lace, all in one piece, it was made for the coronation of the Empress Eugenie, and seven needlewomen worked several years upon it. An eminent French artist made the design for the lace, and the sketch was destroyed as soon as the pattern was worked. It cost something like $45,000. But the event for which it was made never took place, and the empress wore it only once—at the opening of the Suez canal in 1869. For twenty-eight years it reposed in a pawnshop in Athens. How it got there no one seems to know.

A Breakfast Table Problem.
If there is one thing that has prevented a large number of our nouveau riches becoming motorists it is the stumbling block that lies in the correct pronunciation of the word "chauffeur." I always write "shuffer" and try and pronounce it accordingly with a humorous smile. This is a very good way of getting out of the difficulty and avoids all the various "shofur," "shofoor" and "shofawer" and the hundred other wrong ways possible.—Owen John in Anticleric.
