THE KORRECT-SHRUNK WASH SKIRTS

Are the highest type of skirts made in quality, tailoring and fit.

Dozens of models, each new and a little "different" from the usual run of skirts. Bedford Cord, Peirce Twill, Gabardine, Linen Crash, Washable Gaiters, French Pique and Awning Stripes.

Deserving of mention is the fact that the material used in every one of these skirts is PRESHRUNK by a new thorough process, thereby preserving the molded shapeliness of these wonderfully tailored skirts.

Other Wash Skirts at $1.00 to $3.95

Scores of attractive models of every new weave shown this season. A complete size assortment in all waist bands from 23 to 40.

War Expert Writes of the Skagerrak Fight's Effect

By J. W. T. MASON

(Written for the United Press)

NEW YORK, June 2.—The result of the Skagerrak naval battle will add new prestige to the growing record of Germany's young navy; it will have a stimulating moral effect upon the Germans and must depress the British nation because of the large disparity in losses.

But the major purpose of the opposing navies in the present war is to keep trade routes open for friendly merchantmen and to close them to enemy merchantmen. The success of the German fleet in the Skagerrak will not open German ports to the trade of the world. Not a pound of meat, not a barrel of flour, will enter Germany because of the Skagerrak victory, and for this reason the military effect of the clash of the battle cannot possess major importance.

The present details suggest that the British cruiser squadron was led into a German trap. Unless the battle was an accidental meeting of the opposing forces, which is not probable, it seems likely that a new policy of observation close to German waters was being put into operation by the British admiralty. After the warship raid on the British east coast last April, it was announced that new disposition of the British fleet was being made to prevent such adventures in the future.

The British cruiser squadron in the Skagerrak may have been acting under this new policy. If this interpretation be correct, then the Germans saw their opportunity. The Skagerrak is so near German home waters as to permit German warships to use it for a surprise appearance. In a maneuver such as this, the British cruisers could be caught by a superior force, and would be largely at the enemy's mercy until the arrival of rescuing dreadnoughts, which would restore superiority to the British fleet. This may well be what occurred.

Wild Animals in County Jail

United Press Service
SAN FRANCISCO, June 2.—Prisoners at the county jail are facing all the adventures of a big game hunt in tropical jungles. The jail is liable to have elephants in the corridors, cobras and tigers in the cells, dogs in the hallway and monkeys everywhere.

The Al G. Barnes shows have filed a rapievin suit against the Tovo Eisen Kalaha Steamship company to recover three elephants, one tiger, one dog, one king cobra and twenty-five monkeys. Deputy Sheriff John Shepton was sent to the ship to bring the animals ashore. The jail is about the only place that will house the menagerie until the suit is decided.
