CAMPAIGN ADDRESSES.

The republican candidates of Marion county propose to make a thorough canvass, and will devote the two weeks preceding the election to a fair and candid discussion of the issues of the campaign. They will go before the people asking their support, and holding the honest belief that it will be to the public interest to elect them to office. The ticket is composed of good men, whose merits have been tried, and the honest methods used in the convention for choosing the best men, have won the approval of all. They now propose to go before the people and set forth their views and intentions in every precinct. It is due to every voter that he have some knowledge of the men whom he is called on to support at the polls, and innumerable talk in their presence with whatever opposing candidates may choose to present themselves, will give every listener a chance to understand fully the nature of the contest that is waiting, and to form his own opinion of the fitness of the men who ask his vote. This is an honest way of going before the people, and which due weight is given to the personal merits of our republican candidates. We feel there can be no doubt of their success. The population of this city and county is likely to be largely increased the next two years, and our property values to be correspondingly enhanced. Good business talent is necessary to administer our affairs, and the strictest integrity in the management of the public funds. Measured by this test the republican candidates can stand the keenest rivalry, and as the people are not slow to perceive their own interest, their election to office may be looked forward to with entire confidence.

The Woodhull sisters who figured so conspicuously in the Beecher scandal, are still at their old tricks. They have been living in England for many years, and understood, mixed, but it may have been.

THE Astorian figures up its duty in the present complicated condition of political affairs thusly: As an independent newspaper, aiming to treat both parties and all parties alike, The Astorian does not seek to unjustly asperse the motives of anyone, there are many men and women among our readers, zealous advocates of prohibition, who have our regard, and who are making urgent effort for the success of what they believe to be the right. Their opinions are entitled to the same respect and consideration as anybody's else; an honest difference of opinion being oft-times essential to get at the truth, which should be the aim of all discussion.

ALBERT JACKSON, John Smith and John Vice, all of Owingsville, Ky., receive $72 a month each from the government. Their pensions are granted on the score of total blindness contracted during the late war. They were members of the same company of the same regiment—the 24th Kentucky infantry. Vice's claim has just been granted, and he obtains over $14,000 in back pension. He has been a mendicant for years, and his helpless family has endured the most abject poverty.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has thought it wise to delay the appointment of Minister Phelps to the vacant chief justiceship because of the animosity felt toward this diplomatist by the Irish-Americans. His subservience to the British court during his residence in London is a cardinal sin in the eyes of that class of our citizens. Minister Phelps will have to wait awhile.

HERE is a Georgian editor, E. H. Grouby by name, who ought to join the prohibs. He makes the following announcement in his paper: "On and after date the undersigned gives notice that he will prosecute any person selling him intoxicating liquor of any kind to the full extent of the law. This is not for the purpose of injuring whisky dealers, but to get sober and stay so."
