DEATH OF SHERIDAN.

The relegraph brings the sad (but not unexpected) news of General Sheridan's death, which occurred at 1020 a'clack yesterday evening. The prominent characters of the warare being mustered out one by one, and, save the distinguished leader of the federal armies, there was no leader more fearless or successful than the one who has just yielded up his breath. Grant, Sherman and Sheridan are the great names of the war; Thomas might have been their equal in fame if death had not cut short his career. Grant was great because of his military instinct, his power to conduct large operations, his indomitable will and his unselfish devotion to country. Sherman also possessed the higher qualities of generalship, he was aleri, untiring, full of resources, and loyally true to the cause. Phil. Sheridan with all the solid attributes of the soldier, was a more picturesque character, un beau sabreur, a very Murat at the head of his squadrons. That wonderful feat of military genhe by which he turned defeat into ing fee, turned rout into conquesi.

repreachful question was asked, properly do toward the prevention better prices. Merchants were basy "Whoever saw a dead cavalryman" Gen, Sheridan was appointed to the command of that arm of the service, and the reproach of Inactivity was soon wiped out. This writer watched for the greater part of a hot summer day, the march of a cavalry column, numbering 10,000, past Deep Bottom in Virginia. Many of the men remounted, all well supplied with commissary and quartermaster stores, and in fine condition for campaigning. Gen. Sheridan favor of the organizations of the had just returned from an extended had brought them to this state of effectiveness, and the closing scenes of the investment of the rebel capital were illustrated with some brilliant feats by the cavalry.

> to an early grave, as he had not completed his 58th year. Failure of the heart is given as the cause of his death, but it is probable his en. durance was impaired by indiscretion at the table. Grant died of too great fondness for his cigar; President Arthur of his love of good living; and this latter victim of generous conviviality. Solomon says: Better is a morsel of herbs than a stalled ox," but men prominent in arms and statemanship cannot practice frugality.

A great man has fallen in our midst: a successful soldier, a devoted patriot and a worthy citizen. His fellow-countrymen mourn his loss, and his name will be inscribed in enduring characters on our annals.

FALSE SENTIMENT.

The East Oregonian has told a sentimental story about an Indian lad, named Red Moccasin, who lived near the Umatilla agency, but who committed suicide a week ago. The story told of him is that his sister, who lives in Idaho, left two or three brother to charge him with stealing the horses and appropriating the money obtained from the sale. This was a new view of the case to Red Moccooln, and to relieve himself of the imputation of crime, he bought the horses back and sent them to libted feelings, and the knowledge that he, an honest Indian, had been suspected of thievery, so worked on his mind that he committed suicide."

This is very touching, but it does not justify the conclusion of the writer that the story shows, "that poor Lo, contrary to nearly all opinions regarding him, sometimes posasses a sensitive nature, a conscience, and a feeling of self respect which cannot bear insinuations against daracter." To our apprehension it shows that persons irregularly trained resort to desperate deeds on very slight occasion. If this Indian boy had possessed the "self respect" attributed to him by his eulogist, he would have lived down, the suspicion east on him by his relative and shown he was "bonest Injun?" He had done a dishonest act; his pride was stung at its merited reproof, and he resorted to a desperate shift to rid himself of a painful unpleasantheses. It would be hard to make any moral heroism out of such an

"HE'S ALL RIGHT,"

This illustrious warrior has gone How the Slang Phrase is Said to Have Originated.

This cry, like many another that was afterward made popular, is said to have originated as a term of derision for the Prohibitionists and St. John, the candidate of that party for President in 1884. It had its origin in the West, and in about this way: Governor St. John had been a Republican party leader, as is well known, and when he accepted the Prohibition nomination for the Presidency he was roundly denounced by the Republicans. They started the ery, 'What is the matter with St. John?" The answer to this was, "Oh he's all right!" This was accompanied by a significant shake of the head, which was meant to imply that the Democratic barrel had been tapped for St. John and that he was abundantly supplied with lucre and liquid refreshments. The Proble adopted the cry and used it during the canvass in 1884. When their convention met at Indianapolis in May last, with more than 1,000 delegates and three times that number of horses in his care, which he sold for their party friends in attendance, a good price. This moved a half st. John was one of the strong men and he was made the permanent chairman. At his first appearance upon the crowded convention platform a chorus of voices cried out-, What's the matter with St. John? The answering shout from the multitude came like a tornado, "He's dister. "But," says the narrator, all right!" and that was St. John's Seven this did not settle his lacera- welcome by the Prohibitionists. Baltimore Sun.

George Shearer's Dog.

The village of Renton will be practically deserted to-day as the bulk of the population will pay a visit to Scattle. The entise of the exodus is a dog suit, which has been convulsing the town for some time and which has caused so much bitter feeling that it has made friends mortal enemies and turned husband against wife. It appears that George Shear er had a valuable dog wnich developed a foudness for running out into the street and snapping at horses fetlocks. This went along foe some time until some person finally got mad and laid the canine out stark and stiff with a heavy charge of buckshot. This made Mr. Shearer very angry. The dog was his idol and pet and he straightway began suit for $50 damages. The matter became at once the exciting topic of conversation in the town and as usual in casees of excitement, more or less ill feeling was created. This grew-until every one in Renton had taken sides either for or against The pure food bill of Mr. Lee of George Snearer's dog. Society is dis-
