D. J. Cooper arrived from The Dalles on Sunday. When asked how the people of Eastern Oregon were pleased with McKinley's nomination his reply was, that McKinley was the idol of the wool growers, farmers and laborers. At least three-fourths of the people wanted McKinley but not more than one-fourth wanted the bosses gold plank in the platform. The ambiguous term "the great civilized nations of the earth" agreeing as to what kind of money we shall use is very objectionable, and something new. About 120 years ago the civilized nations of the earth undertook to dictate terms to us, and we objected. The great nation undertook to force us to comply and after a long struggle gave it up as a bad job. Thirty-six years ago this spring there was an attempt made to break up this Union, to prevent which cost many lives and billions of dollars. The great civilized nation of the earth took part against the Union in that conflict and failed. Now since by dictating and running our own business we have grown to be, in point of wealth and numbers by far the greatest civilized nation on the globe. We are asked to endorse a platform saying that, when the great civilized nations say what kind of money we shall use it and not before, it remains to be seen whether our people will be dictated to by those great nations or not.

SALEM'S SUPERB MUSICAL EVENT

Fine Closing Concert by Prof. Heritage's Pupils.

At the First M. E. church this morning occurred by all odds the most charming public entertainment in connection with the Willamette commencement exercises of the week. The event so pleasing was the closing concert of the college of music, under Prof. H. A. Heritage. The auditorium was handsomely decorated for the event, and a magnificent audience greeted the performers. The hour was unusual for such an event, but the numbers present and the manifest enthusiasm spoke volumes for our city's interest in Prof. Heritage and his art.

Promptly at 10 o'clock the fifteen ladies and gentlemen, who have completed their year's work in the college of music, accompanied by Profs. Heritage and Winkler, formed a semicircle on the platform, and the delightful program was begun. From beginning to the end the numbers were of excellent character, appealing happily to the large audience, who were unstinted in their applause. The numbers were mostly simple in character, but all of the highest order of composition. In fact, the artistic quality of the program was unusual, and rendered with a grace that plainly displayed the work of a master trainer. From the beautiful ballad to the heavier operatic selection, the execution was marked for its smoothness and rhythm. It must be admitted that Prof. Heritage in his first year at Salem has done a great work.

Musical interest and culture has taken great strides, and his work leaves an impress that will be felt for years to come. It would be in keeping with custom to say pleasant things of his students, and their work this morning merits high compliments throughout, but it is much more gratifying to chronicle the development in our midst of the higher musical culture which was demonstrated by this event. Prof. Heritage is to be personally complimented for his superb work, and Salem, as a city, is to be congratulated upon having the impress of his superior talent left forever upon her art-loving people while all concede that Prof. Heritage is the master of song, and the moving spirit in the great musical work being done at Salem. His acknowledgment with delight and point with pride to the work of Prof. Emil Winkler, the pianist and teacher of violin. The work of this gentleman in giving our people the benefit of his art as interpreted by the German spirit, cannot be too highly esteemed. The pure music of the Germans is admitted the world over to be the highest type of the art, and the work of this son of the Fatherland ranks with the best that the great artist can instill in the natural born musician.

At the close of the program, as soon as Prof. Heritage could be subdued the enthusiastic applause, he made a few pertinent and practical remarks, to which everyone felt like saying amen. He then introduced Pres. Hawley, who in well chosen words presented the members of the instrumental and vocal classes their respective diplomas.

A STRANGE CASE.—Last evening as the steamer Albany landed from Portland, a lady with several pieces of baggage stepped off. She asked Louis Rlesner, the expressman, if he would take her effects to the home of Mr. Fretz, which he proceeded to do, supposing the lady would follow in person. Mr. Fretz's family knew nothing of anyone coming and the party did not show up, so the baggage is still in possession of the driver, and the lady's whereabouts is unknown.

REMAINS INTERRED.—The remains of Mrs. Kate Green (nee Nicklin) who died in Portland last Friday, arrived in the city on the Roseburg local this morning. Two cars were in awaiting at the depot and conveyed the party at once to the Odd Fellows cemetery, where the remains were interred, Rev. G. W. Grant officiating. Mrs. Green formerly resided in this city.

PICTURE TAKEN.—The postoffice force today had their picture taken. The entire force was present except Postmaster Bonham and Mailing Clerk Muellhaupt. Those forming the group were: Deputy postmaster, J. A. Sellwood, delivery clerks, Misses Zadie Palmer and Mollie Creighton; mail carriers, Ben Taylor, Geo. E. Hatch, Chas. Cosper and Fred Lockley.

A GRAND PICNIC.

On Friday of this week there will be a grand picnic in the Savage grove, just east of the asylum. There will be music by moonlight, dancing on the green, and the gypsies will be there to tell your fortune. Ice cream and lemonade sold on the ground. Picnic at 7 p. m. Admission to grounds 10 cents. This park is to be dedicated to the public on this occasion and will be named in an appropriate manner. Under the auspices of the ladies' society of the Unitarian church.

MARRIED.

LEE-CAMPBELL.—At the First Congregational church, Wednesday, June 24, 1896, Miss Clara Lee, of Portland, and Mr. Lewis Campbell, of Portland. Only the relatives and a few of the intimate friends of the contracting parties witnessed the ceremony.

The church had been beautifully decorated with ivy and choice roses. Promptly at 12 o'clock Miss Bertha Hubbard began the execution of the wedding march and, accompanied by her father, Reuben Lee, and preceded by the bridesmaid, Miss Eva Lee, the bride's sister, the bride marched down the aisle to the rostrum where she was met by the bridegroom, accompanied by the best man, Mr. Davis, of Portland, and Rev. W. C. Kantner, D. D. The happy couple stood before a bell formed of beautiful roses, while Dr. Kantner performed the ceremony in a very impressive manner. At the conclusion of the ceremony the party repaired to the home of Mrs. Aiken, on State street, where a delicious wedding breakfast was served.

The bride is a highly accomplished and handsome young woman of Salem. She is well and favorably known to the school circles of this county, since she has taught considerable, having assisted at times in the East school.

The groom is a successful young business man of Portland.

The newly wedded couple took the afternoon train for Portland, where they will commence housekeeping.

STATESMAN—MCKINNEY SUIT.

On Trial, Before Justice Johnson—Pleadings and Trial.

The suit of the Statesman Publishing Co. vs. Addison Dille, to recover 30 cents due on subscription, was set for 10 o'clock today. Hayden & McNary appeared for plaintiffs, and Bingham, Holmes & Kellogg for defendant.

John McNary appeared and filed a demurrer at 10 o'clock and then counsel asked for an hour's further time to prepare for the conflict. The court had a beautiful ball on its left cheek, and while its appearance did not exactly command respect, Justice Johnson was backed up with the arm of the law—Deputy Sheriff Cooper sitting at his right and the telephone to call out the Oregon militia at his left, if necessary.

It was the rather unpleasant duty of a JOURNAL reporter to be obliged out of respect for the public demand for news in an important matter to chronicle this trial which involves an esteemed contemporary in the toils of law.

THE PETITION sets forth that plaintiff is a corporation engaged in publishing a newspaper known as the "Daily Oregon Statesman" and delivering the same to subscribers.

That at request of one Addison Dille the paper was furnished him from May 18th to May 31st, and that the reasonable value of the same was 30 cents, in lawful money of the United States.

That defendant Dille has failed to pay the same and now owes the sum of 30 cents, for which plaintiff demands judgment and costs.

THE ANSWER of defendant Dille, by his attorneys, is as follows in substance. That on Jan. 3, 1895, defendant became a subscriber, that the paper was delivered up to May 31st, 1895, that he never agreed to pay plaintiff 30 cents or any other sum.

He alleges that he ordered the paper of John W. McKinley, who was the exclusive owner of the exclusive right to sell and deliver the Oregon Statesman in Salem and its suburbs.

Then follows a copy of the Statesman's contract and agreement with McKinley, made May 17, 1895, for one year as follows:

To lease its routes in the city of Salem to said John W. McKinley to deliver and collect for same paper at 15 cents a week, to pay at the office 10 cents a week for the papers; when the list shall have reached 1,000 copies he was to have 15 copies free; he shall bear expense of delivery and "at expiration of contract by limitation or through neglect to fulfill its provisions he shall deliver up to the above company the lists of said subscribers."

"This contract shall be renewed during the strict performance of its provisions." Signed in duplicate, by Statesman Publishing Co., C. B. Irvine, manager.

PART STRUCK OUT. On motion of counsel for plaintiff following was ordered struck out by court: "That the said John W. McKinley, previous to entering into the said contract had paid a large sum of money to the previous owner thereof, to-wit $550, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff thereof."

The motion to strike all of answer out was not allowed. John W. McKinley alleges strict compliance with the contract and notified plaintiff that he desired a renewal in compliance with the terms thereof; that he is the owner of the routes and is the only person entitled to receive money on subscription to the Statesman at Salem or its suburbs; that defendant Dille is willing to pay to said McKinley and to no other person.

PLAINTIFF'S REPLY. At 11 o'clock counsel for plaintiff filed a specific reply and the four legal gladiators gathered around a table to dissect its contents. The reply sets forth that defendant Dille had notice by publication of the severance of the contract between the Statesman Publishing Co. and McKinley and had no right to pay McKinley, or refuse the Statesman.

A JURY TRIAL. "In view of the fact that Justices generally side with the plaintiff, we have concluded to ask for a jury trial," said lawyer Holmes with a smile.

The justice remarked: "The first thing we want is 80 put up." Mr. Holmes: "That will be forthcoming." The court then began to call a panel to try the case.

When the name of J. A. Albert was called lawyer Bingham asked if that meant the senior or junior Albert. The panel was soon concluded and the fight over a jury began. The twelve called by the court were: C. P. Bishop, S. M. Stock, Ray Gilbert, J. F. Staiger, E. M. Croisan, H. S. Bell, H. W. Barr, J. A. Baker, Geo. Waters, M. O. Buren, J. A. Albert, A. B. Gardner. Ray Gilbert, H. S. Bell, Geo. Waters, J. A. Albert, E. M. Croisan, A. B. Gardner, were challenged and the rest stood as the jury.

The court adjourned to 1:30 p. m.

At 1:30 the case went to trial to a jury of five, Sol M. Stock being excused as an exempt fireman. Mr. Hayden opened the case to the jury, prefacing his remarks by saying that while the sum sued for was a very small amount, but the principal involved was very important. He read the pleadings and contract to the jury, and commented thereon briefly. Mr. McKinley had not canvassed as he agreed, not using his effort to solicit subscribers as he agreed, and not making a settlement on the tenth of each month as agreed. If McKinley had been wronged he had an action for damage. He could not carry on his suit over the head of Mr. Dille as he was trying to do.

Mr. Holmes stated the case to the jury. Mr. McKinley had been wronged. This was tacitly admitted by counsel for plaintiff, but they said he had chosen the wrong remedy. The turning point in this case was in that clause giving McKinley a right to renew. If he had complied with the contract he had a right to renew it.

The statement that he had not settled promptly on the 10th of each month would be shown untrue. He might have failed by a day or two at times, but it was not claimed he now would anything. He had applied for a reward, had kept his contract to the letter, and they had offered to renew it for six months or a year, if he would strike out the renewal clause.

TESTIMONY OF WITNESSES. C. B. Irvine recited allegations of petition. Cross-questioned by Bingham: Dille promised to pay this bill when he ordered the paper; did not know when he ordered the paper; but that was the date (May 18) when he ordered it, at least he never complained because it was sent to him; Dille ordered the paper of Irvine personally, saying he wanted the paper.

Bingham: When did Dille say he would pay you for this paper? Counsel for plaintiff objected.

Bingham: In the first case the court had non-suited Kirkpatrick because the question had not been asked, did he ask this question? It was necessary to ask this question.

The objection was sustained. Q. How long had Dille been taking the paper? Objected to.

Bingham: "We have a right to show how long Dille had received the paper." Objection sustained.

Irvine continued: Paper had been delivered by Fred David. Bingham: Was not David the same carrier McKinley had employed? Objected to. Overruled.

Irvine: The same carriers were continued. He paid them. McKinley paid them before May 17. May 30 Fred David was discharged because had insisted he was still working for McKinley.

Dille: Received paper as stated at his room, same as before for the period sued for. Q. Who did you subscribe to? Objected to and sustained.

Dille called for defense: ordered paper of McKinley and paid him to June 3d. Produced receipt. On June 3d discontinued of McKinley and ordered it at office.

When John W. McKinley was put on the stand there was a long dispute as to the limits of the contract, which was a renewal of the contract begun in May, 1894.

Mr. Holmes was making an able argument to the court on the rules of evidence in constructing a contract, when THE JOURNAL went to press.
