"The Lion and the Mouse."

It is rarely given to the playwright to produce a work which will stand the test of years, usually the products of the American author last for a brief season, of say 30 weeks, and is then relegated to the waste basket. But this is not the experience of Chas. Klein, whose great drama of social, financial and political life in this country, "The Lion and the Mouse" is now playing its third year in New York city, a record never before equalled in the history of our stage.

When the play was first produced at the Lyceum theater, New York, in October of 1905 the public and critics were dumbfounded at the picture of the corruption in the highest financial circles of the nation, they did not deem such things could possibly exist. In a vague sort of way it was realized that the concentration of unlimited wealth in the hands of the unscrupulous, was a menace to the general weal, but it had never been driven home so strikingly before.

Then came the famous investigations, which revealed all the corruption and false dealing in every walk of what is termed "high finance"—these were followed by prison sentences, suicides, prosecutions and disgrace; efforts were made to clean up various institutions and to restore the confidence of the investing public. With all this came the general acknowledgement of the truth of the playwright's picture and the acclaim of his greatness.

Henry B. Harris, who is responsible for the production of "The Lion and the Mouse," is sending to the west this season the most powerful cast even seen in this remarkable drama, it is headed by Dorothy Donnelly in the role of Shirley Rossmore, and Paul Everton, as John Burkett Ryder, the richest man in the world. The piece will be seen at the Grand opera house Saturday night, Dec. 14.

as they have presented at their vaudeville houses had ever been seen before they became vaudeville promoters. The statement that they have retired, or are about to retire, from vaudeville management because they have failed, are just about insane enough to be considered comic paragraphs in London Punch.

"Klaw & Erlanger have never failed in anything they have undertaken to do, and they certainly cannot be said to have failed in vaudeville with the record they have made in the past six months, demonstrating its vast possibilities as they had never been developed by the old-line vaudeville manager. And in all this both public and performer have benefited."

The Japanese Warrior in 1867. She was destined to China and Japan, the dream of years to me. We were to go by the West Indies to Rio Janeiro, thence by the Cape of Good Hope to Madagascar, to Aden at the mouth of the Red sea, to Muscat at the entrance of the Persian gulf, and so by India and Siam to our first port in Chinese waters, Hongkong.

The time, too, was opposite, for Japan had not yet entered upon the path of modernization which she has since pursued with such revolutionary progress. Some eight or ten years ago there lunched with me a young Japanese naval officer, who, I understand, has occupied a position of distinguished responsibility during the recent war with Russia. I chanced to ask him if he had ever seen a two-sworded man. He replied, "Never." He belonged to the samurai class, who once wore them, but in actual life they have disappeared.

When the Iroquois reached Japan, and throughout her stay, two-sworded men were as thick almost as blackberries. To Europeans prepossessions it was illuminating to see half a dozen riding down a street, hatless, crown of the head shaved, with a short pigtail tathe back tied near the skull, and then brought stiffly forward close to the scalp; their figures crowned, the handles of the two swords projecting closely from the left side of their gaments, and the feet resting in stirrups of slipper form, which my memory says were of straw-work; but of that I am less sure. This equipment was completed by a painted fan struck in the belt, and at times an opened paper umbrella.

I have been passenger in the same boat with some of these warriors, accoutred as above, and using their fans as required, while engaged in animated conversation with the courtesy and smiling affability characteristic of all classes in Japan. Such then was the as yet raw material out of which have been evolved the heroic soldiery who have recently astonished the world by the practical development they have given to modern military ideas; then as unlike the troops which now are, except in courage, as the ancient Japanese war-junk is to the present battleship.

I was in Japan at the arrival of their first ironclad, purchased in the

GLEE AND MANDOLIN CLUBS

The musical critics over the state have always pronounced the musical organization of the state university at Eugene as one of the best in the entire country. If the reports from the recent concert given in Eugene are to be believed, it was the best ever given by the Glee and Mandolin clubs, and the music loving public may fully expect a concert worth while and no one not to be missed.

The performance produced by the college men is somewhat different from the general run of musical attractions in that they present the true atmosphere of college life. Everything is characteristic and typical of student days. Among the songs and mandolin selections are lively college tunes, latest popular airs, catchy songs, that make a decided hit, and a few solos of merit.

Klaw & Erlanger and Vaudeville.

In reference to Klaw & Erlanger and vaudeville, Wilbur M. Bates, their general representative, has this to say:

"In the cloud of rumors that have been flying about the country during the past two months to the effect that Klaw & Erlanger are to retire from vaudeville, their remarkable success in this direction has been overlooked by some and purposely disregarded by others, according to personal inclination.

"But the fact remains that these gentlemen have really achieved a remarkable success in this field of amusement enterprise and have set up a new record as a standard of success, as they have done in everything else they have attempted in the past ten years.

"Not one of the old school vaudeville magnates ever dreamed that a vaudeville performance could be put together that would draw over 50,000 people a week, yet that is what Klaw & Erlanger have accomplished at the Auditorium in Chicago. They have made a similar record of great attendance at the Forrest Theater in Philadelphia, the Tremont in Boston and the New York theater in New York.

"Their advent into the vaudeville field gave this form of entertainment a great impetus and no such bills
