GREAT RUBBER TRAFFIC ON THE AMAZON RIVER

In a country of such vast and undeveloped forests as exist in the upper Amazon, waterways are the only avenues of trade and almost the only means of communication for the inhabitants. As a consequence the dugout canoe became a necessity for the everyday life of the natives, and if accurate accounts of the canoes in daily use on the Amazon and its tributaries were obtainable the number would run up into many thousands.

Until rubber became such an important article in the world's markets the forests of the Upper Amazon were practically unexplored, produced no revenue worth mention, and Iquitos was but one of many unheard of villages situated on that river and never visited by larger crafts than those propelled by the paddle and the oar.

With the opening of the rubber tracts a necessity arose for some other means of transporting the product to market, and the system of steam launches for collecting and bringing it to Iquitos was the result. As a consequence, Iquitos rose to such proportions that a regular monthly steamship service with Liverpool has been established, and the month of October witnessed the inauguration of a similar service with New York.

Rubber is virtually the only product carried hence by the steamships.

and to bring that rubber to Iquitos steam launches are operated by the merchants of the town. These merchants usually have their "clients," or men whom they have "staked," with provisions, etc., located on the different tributaries of the Upper Amazon, who pay for these provisions in rubber gathered from the forests, the merchants accepting the product at prices prevailing here at the time of delivery.

Ten or fifteen years ago when the field was comparatively new, fortunes were easily made, but today sharp competition, which caused a large increase in expensive launches, resulted in small profits, it being said that local merchants are selling higher prices in the Javary river district than those prevailing in Europe. The launch business has been overdone, and there seems a tendency at present to dispose of them but this seems only a method of remedying a temporary evil of over-competition, for the launch must continue to play its important part in the business life of Iquitos as long as the supply and demand for rubber exist.—Consular Report.

Corvallis city water works from Mary's peak showed net balance at end of year besides paying interest of nearly $4000.

In parts of Switzerland stone-throwing contests are held, handsome prizes being given to those who throw a fair sized rock farthest.

That it was beneficial and quick in relieving me there is no doubt and it is my intention to obtain another bottle." For sale at Dr. Stone's drug store.
