

ADVOCATES REDUCING THE LIMIT ON DEER FROM FIVE TO THREE

Deputy Game Warden Charles B. Gay Says They Are More Plentiful This Year than for Many Years—Some Violations.

(Medford Sun.)

"Deer were never so plentiful in Jackson County as they are this season—at least not for several years back," said Charles B. Gay, deputy game warden, to a representative of The Sun. "I have just returned from a trip through the hunting country and I saw all kinds of traces of deer and there will be great sport this year. And we can have it like this every year by taking a little care. Five deer are more than any one man can use rightfully and I believe that the limit ought to be reduced to three. That is enough for any man and will give him all the venison he and his friends can eat. By reducing the limit to that figure, and enforcing the law with regard to the closed season, we can have all the deer we want."

According to the game warden, the game laws are being observed more generally this year than ever before. There are some parties in the woods, however, that are under suspicion and they will be dealt with to the full extent of the law. In fact, already evidence has been secured against two parties for killing deer out of the open season and this will be placed before the next grand jury and it is expected that indictments will be returned. Several parties which have been hunting in the vicinity of Croaker butte are being watched as reports have reached Mr. Gay that the law is being violated in that district.

Several additional deputies have been put on by the state game warden and a vigorous campaign against violators of the law will be put into effect.

Another thing that is arousing the suspicions of the game warden is the fact that large number of shotguns are found in parties who claim to be deer hunting. No one uses a shotgun to shoot deer and it is believed that quail and China pheasants are the game that some of the shotgun owners are after. The season for them is closed at this time and prosecution will follow violations of the game law in this respect as well as for illegal deer killing.

Mr. Humphrey, proprietor of the gun store on West Main Street, who has hunted deer in fifteen states, says that deer are more plentiful here than in any other place where he has ever been. He also states that a large number of parties have been fitted out with guns and hunting outfits and that a large number of the animals will undoubtedly be killed this year.

The Kindness of Thackeray. Americans should have more than a tourist interest in the Crystal palace, that famous pleasure resort of suburban London, says the Argonaut. Its famous glass walls and roof are the same as those which sheltered the first great international exhibition in Hyde Park in 1851, an exhibition from which for the only time

America held aloof. Not that Uncle Sam was not invited to help the prince consort in his attempt to give the world a living picture of the point of industrial development at which mankind had arrived; on the contrary, every effort was made to secure full representation of American manufactures.

Under the glass roof of the Crystal palace was enacted on its opening day a scene which deserves to be recorded in a painting. The event coincided with the presence in London of a young American couple on their honeymoon. The husband had saved for many a day to give his wife the pleasure of a trip to Europe, but funds were running short, and the price for admission to the exhibition on the opening day was so high that one ticket only could be bought.

With that ticket the young wife made her way to the ceremony, only to find that, owing to her small stature, she could not see one of the royalties and notables in the great procession. At the thought of the disappointment and the waste of money represented by her ticket, the tears began to flow down her cheeks. At that moment she felt two strong hands under her arms, and found herself lifted high above the crowd. So held she saw everything, but when she was placed down on the ground once more it was to find herself indebted to a stranger, a stalwart Englishman who had divined the cause of her tears. Some years passed away. Then, in their home town, the American and his wife went one night to hear a lecture by a famous English author. No sooner had the lecturer ascended the platform than the wife, turning excitedly to her husband, exclaimed, "That's he; that's my great, kind Englishman!" It was Thackeray; the big-hearted Thackeray.
