WILLAMETTE U AND CALIFORNIA TEAMS WILL CLASH TONIGHT

Visiting Quintet Promises Fast Game at Willamette University Gym

The crack University of California basketball quintet arrived in Salem today for a game tonight with the Willamette university five which promises to be a lively skirmish. The Californians dropped Monday's game to O. A. 26 to 17 but held the lead in the first half and only after "Doc" raspy tongue dressed his men down were they able to stem the rush of the invaders. The game at Corvallis was fast and clean and all who saw the game say that the visitors put up a first class game but on a long trip injuries are likely to handicap a team.

The Willamette five which has been suffering too much to gripe and not enough to the pipe has been shaken up by Coach Mathews and he expects to have the best possible lineup to present against the strong C. U. aggregation. Brooks will be back at center and Jewett, Jackson and Shisler will fill in at forward positions with Fiegel as the main stay in the guard positions and plenty of substitutes to pick from.

The Willamette team on their own floor expect considerable advantage over the visitors in locating the baskets and it is certain the team that expects to win tonight's game must expect to find the basket with more than passing frequency.

The game will be played in the Willamette gym. The California team will probably line up with Norton and Bork in the forward line, Foster at center, and Emburg and Steinfeld as guards.

American Dog Team In European War

Berkeley, Cal., Jan. 12.—Far up in the ice clad slopes of the French Alps, or in the snow-filled valleys of Voges, sharp American commands of "mush on," "gee," and "aw" are echoing today. And in answer, Alaska-American dog teams strain at their traces dragging sled loads of cartridges to France's skyline defenders, or comforts to wounded soldiers.

"Foster" and "Tracy," half breed eskimo and malamute sledge dogs, are masters of a herd of 48 animals. They were recently recruited in Alaska and Labrador by "Scotty" Allen, famous driver of the Darling racing dog team. Allan returned from France today. Allan says it was necessary to teach the French soldiers the American commands for the dogs before the dogs would respond. When their French drivers called to them in French, the dogs sat on their haunches and grinned, Allan says.

Americans Lack Real Patriotism Says Admiral

San Diego, Cal., Jan. 12.—Americans lack real patriotism, according to Rear Admiral William F. Fullam, commander of the Pacific reserve fleet, in an address before the women's branch of the navy league at Hotel Del Coronado. "We have never been as patriotic as we ought to be and no nation has more reason to be patriotic," he said. "We have spasms of patriotism, but they don't last very long. Four out of five of us cannot sing the national air. And, by way, that's one of the things we teach daily to the recruits of the army and navy." "Consider the frequency of wars. We have fought England, France, Morocco, the Indian wars, the war with Mexico and the Spanish-American war. There have been 31 years of war in 159 years since 1776—over 20 per cent of every three and a half years of peace. If the business man expected an earthquake every four or five years, wouldn't he insure against it? Having a strong navy is only like holding an insurance policy." Admiral Fullam said the war of the revolution was the most costly per capita, because it lasted so long, and lasted so long because the colonies had no army. "We think we're patriotic, but we're not half as patriotic as we should be, and would be if the boys of this country weren't brought up in a namby pamby sort of way. The awful, horrible blunders of past history will show this and we can draw our own deductions." "General Scott captured Vera Cruz, only to have 7,000 of his 12,000 soldiers woefully at needless cost of American life. There were 200,000 deserters from the armies of the north during the Civil war. "In the Spanish war, our clunkers died like flies because they didn't know how to take care of themselves."
