Technical Training.

Large amounts of money have been given by practical men of affairs to establish and endow technical schools. The fact that, having been denied the advantages of training in the schools, they desire to give better opportunities to people of another generation is a pretty good reason for the existence of such institutions. It probably is true that the greater part of the millions given to higher education of whatever sort has come from the bounty of men who made their wealth without having had the advantages of the training which they seek to give to those who are to follow them. It is unreasonable to suppose that large endowments would be given in this way if the self-made donors did not realize their own loss because of the lack of educational opportunities.

Another fact is equally apparent. The technical schools cannot turn out well equipped men fast enough to meet the constant demand for their services. Any professor of standing will bear testimony that the requests made for trained men in his department exceed the available supply. In many of the technical schools the members of the graduating classes are placed before they receive their diplomas, leaving the institution on commencement day to begin work in good positions. In some lines no one but such a graduate can secure a place. Such a condition of things is eloquent of the worth of technical training.

If a thousand men whose training was limited to a grammar school course and practical experience in the shop were selected and put side by side with another thousand from Hensseler, Massachusetts Institute, the Sibley school, Purdue, Stevens Institute, Worcester Polytechnic and similar technical schools the group would furnish the larger number of efficient and successful workers. If the attainments of the entire body of graduates of American technical schools were compared with those of an equal number of workers without any advantages of the school the result would not be doubtful.

The captains of industry are relatively few. Their success often has been due to native genius. Sometimes peculiar conditions have helped them forward. Leadership in other fields has come in the same way. Those who have been trained for command often have failed completely. But where one man has gone from the grammar school and the four years' observation in the shop to the head of a great establishment there have been thousands who have trudged their way through life with little enjoyment of its opportunities, with relatively small influence upon their fellows, and with a horizon limited by the walls of the factory.

Hundreds of educated men have wasted their chances. Hundreds have failed completely in a chosen profession. Leadership among them may have been less frequent than it should have been. But the great majority of those who crowd the technical schools to overflowing are there because of the encouragement of employers or friends who tell them of the better opportunities open to those who are educated. It is not by the relatively few captains of industry that the technical schools are to be judged. Nor are the many failures to be charged against them without frank recognition of the percentage of failures everywhere. It is in raising the average of intelligence that their greatest value lies.

Trial Catarrh treatments are being mailed out free, on request, by Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. These tests are proving to the people—without a penny's cost—the great value of this scientific prescription known to druggists everywhere as Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Remedy. Sold by all dealers.

Women and Industry.

The president of Bryn Mawr, speaking on a topic of unusual importance, expressed the following opinion: "We are now living in the midst of great, and, I believe, on the whole, beneficent social changes which herald the coming economic independence of women. Everything seems to indicate that women will not only make their way into all except a few of the trades and professions, but that they will be compelled by economic causes beyond their control to stay in them after marriage. Already in teaching, nursing, library work, typewriting, bookkeeping, telephoning, telegraphing, they are steadily taking possession and driving men before them."

Recent observations on this great topic are as follows:

"The higher education ought to fit women for the single occupation of bearing and educating children, and it is the most intellectual occupation that there is in the world."—President Charles W. Eliot, of Harvard University.

"The purpose of higher education of women is to give the power of judging men. A college graduate should be able to judge human nature."—Professor William James, of Harvard University.

Fighting Consumption.

No feature of modern life is more noteworthy than the manifest determination of members of the medical profession to find and fight the ancient enemies of the race. Many of the diseases which used to sweep away whole families and terrorize a community in times of epidemic now, are attacked boldly, driven back from the point of danger, and then kept at a distance by preventive measures. Those poor unfortunate women who are "given up to die" are by no means so numerous as they once were.

The great white plague still continues in its destructive career. It claims as its toll of death more than 3,500 victims each year in Chicago alone. It is responsible for one-seventh of the world's annual mortality. It fills the country with despair and despairing souls who look forward to a certain death. To fight such a foe of humanity has been the ambition of many an investigator, particularly during the last quarter of a century, since Koch's discovery in 1882. That progress is being made and that there is room for hope of the final triumph over this great plague is believed everywhere.

The campaign against tuberculosis now is to be pushed vigorously in Chicago. The plan of battle has been outlined clearly. In six of the best dispensaries of the city volunteer physicians who are admirably equipped for the work will be in attendance, at given hours to advise with the afflicted and furnish needed treatment. On each week day at least one of the six dispensaries will be open. This preliminary work will be followed up by the service of trained nurses, who will visit homes, make wise suggestions regarding ventilation, diet and rules of living and help in every possible way to reduce the suffering of the patient and at the same time check the spread of the disease. These nurses will become effective agents for the prevention of tuberculosis in others because of their skill in treating those already within the clutches of the disease.

It is this phase of the new campaign which has the greatest value. The declarations are boldly made that there is no need of any one dying from consumption and that many who have died from it might have been saved had they acted in time. The work of the tuberculosis institute includes the reduction of the suffering of those who are in advanced stages of the disease, but its most important service to the community will be along the lines of prevention.

The rules laid down both for the sick and the well are worth a careful examination. A simple life with plenty of fresh air is the prescription for the careful and clean persons who wish to shake off the incipient plague. The prudent nurse who visits the home of one of the dispensary patients will have splendid opportunities for wise suggestion. It must be a campaign of education even more than a campaign of relief. The results of tuberculosis are so well known that there will be general gratification that vigorous attempts are to be made to check its ravages. If these efforts receive the cordial support of the health department, the medical profession, and the people, much may be accomplished during the next few years in the relief from one of the oldest and most destructive foes of the human race.—Chicago Tribune.

Constipation
Baked sweet apples, with some people, bring relief for Constipation. With others, eating a whole apple will have the same effect. Nature undoubtedly has a valuable remedy to relieve every ailment known to man. If physicians can not find Nature's way to health, and this is strikingly true with regard to Constipation. The bark of a certain tree in California—Cascara Sagrada—offers a most excellent aid to this end. But, combined with Egyptian Senna, Slippery Elm Bark, Solid Extract of Prunes, etc., this same Cascara bark gives its greatest possible power to correct Constipation. A toothsome Candy Tablet, called Lax-ets, is now made at the Dr. Shoop Laboratories, from this ingenious and most effective prescription. Its effect on Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath, Salivary Complication, etc., is indeed prompt and satisfying.
