GUITEAU
What the Doctors say of the Brain—The Burial Ceremonies.

New York, 3.—Tribune's Washington, Dr. McWilliams, assistant physician at the district jail, does not think Guiteau showed all the firmness in his last hours with which he has been credited. He said: I had been at the jail every night for a whole week, watching him pretty closely. On the night of Thursday I visited his cell about midnight and found him sitting on a bed looking straight before him in vacancy, the most perfect picture of despondence I ever beheld. He did not want any bungling. I willingly promised to do it. "You will be down at this murder tomorrow," he said. To this I made no reply. When I saw him next morning the guard said that he had slept none during the night. He would occasionally go into a dose and start out of it, with some inarticulate sound. Officers bear witness that he ate nothing for his breakfast. He may have put something in his mouth amounting to nothing. It was the way at dinner when he was said to have eaten a hearty meal. From what he has learned from the guards he breaks down in perfect despair this morning and wept freely. It was necessary to make every effort to keep him up, to talk to him—, fan him, and urge him to be firm, to be a man. When General Crocker came into the cell to read the death warrant Guiteau was greatly agitated, but he was able to stand. When it had been read he sat down, when he reached the top of the scaffold he faltered, not stumbled, and in reading his prayer, he wavered so excessively that Crocker was at one time anxious to stop it. I was just back of the scaffold, and could see him catching his breath, and struggling to control himself. It was dreadful.

THE BURIAL.

Washington, 1.—The body of Guiteau was buried this afternoon in the northeast corner of the jail, and so far as known to the contrary the remains will lie there undisturbed by any future sepulture. Under the law, the disposition of bodies of criminals who are executed rests within the discretion of the warden. In the case of Guiteau, his sister, Mrs. Scoville, was without means and could not have undertaken his burial expenses, even if permitted to do so. The only other relative who has appeared on the scene (his brother, John W. Guiteau) was unwilling to assume the risk of taking charge of the remains, believing he would be powerless to prevent "body snatchers" from stealing them, therefore General Crocker resolved to bury the assassin's body within the walls of the jail, where it would be beyond the reach alike of vengeance or speculation. The northeast corner, in which Guiteau is buried, is upon the opposite side of the rotunda from the one on which he was hung, and from the window of the cell in which he was confined one can look down upon his grave. The brick floor was removed this morning, and a grave seven feet deep was dug. At 4 o'clock this afternoon the coffin containing Chas. J. Guiteau was borne from the chapel upon the shoulders of six jail prisoners, and without any service or ceremony whatever, was lowered into the grave and buried from sight. The only persons present were John W. Guiteau, Dr. Hicks, Warden Crocker and son, Mr. Wright, undertaker, P. Warde, the engineer of the jail, Deputy Warden Russ, Captain Crocker and the six prisoners who acted as pall bearers. The coffin was closed last evening, and no one has since been permitted to see the remains. Mrs. Scoville, accompanied by Miss Chevallier, arrived at the jail shortly before 6 o'clock, and implored the warden to be allowed to see the remains, and witness the burial. General Crocker, however, remained firm in his determination not to accede to her request, and after a few minutes she returned to the city, leaving a number of flower devices which she had brought with her, and which she expected to place upon the grave. As the body was being taken down the steps leading from the chapel to the central rotunda of the building, the mourners, or rather the witnesses stood near the door leading to the northeast rotunda, and as it was taken down the flight of steps leading from the rotunda to the brick floor of the corridor, they silently filed in behind the convict pall bearers. Arrived at the grave the little procession halted. Warden Crocker looked enquiringly first toward Dr. Hicks and then to J. W. Guiteau. "All right," said the latter, with the same imperturbable composure he has exhibited all through the ordeal of the last three days, and the coffin was at once lowered to its place. After the earth had been replaced, top of the grave levelled off, John W. Guiteau stepped forward and placed at either end a crown of white immortelles. Not a word was spoken, not a tear was shed. An outcast from human sympathy when living, Guiteau at last found sepulture in an unmarked grave.

Washington, 2.—Dr. Lamb was asked to-day if it was true that Guiteau's brain was found in a normal condition, and reported that it was true so far as the brain is concerned, but the membrane that enveloped it was found to be unhealthy, and will be examined closely. Was the brain a surprise to you? No, it could not have been very well, as I had no expectation in regard to it. I simply examined the brain with the desire to find as much as possible its condition. Drs. Lamb and Somers think it will be several days before the report is completed. Dr. Hartigan is of the opinion that it will be ready sooner. Dr. Hartigan said that the membranes around the brain were apt to cause a doubt in the minds of those who were disposed to favor the insanity theory, but he had often seen the same condition of membrane in persons never suspected of insanity. Dr. McDonald, whose expert testimony during the Guiteau trial formed one feature, attended the autopsy yesterday, and was to-day asked if it was true the brain was found in a healthy condition. Yes, was the reply, that was the case. It could hardly have been in better condition. In weight it was only half an ounce below normal. Its appearance was natural and healthy. Was not there an unexpected result? With me, at least, it was no more than I expected. I have seen no reason to change my opinion about the deceased. But does the brain indicate the mental condition? To a certain extent, yes, and as the work with the microscope becomes more accurate, it will show it more fully. A diseased brain is regarded as an indication of insanity, although some people have been known to have diseased brains. But it is said that the membrane was diseased? It was not healthy. Its condition might or might not indicate disease. Microscopic examination will show that and determine exactly what it does indicate. Will there be anything further developed in the examination of the brain to change your opinion? asked the reporter. I don't see how there can be. The examination will be continued; will be as thorough as possible, and will give minute particulars, but the general conclusions arrived at will not be changed. In my opinion the brain was a good one.

A Christian Governor.
Louisville, Ky., 2.—At 11 o'clock this morning Luke F. Blackburn, Governor of Kentucky, was confirmed at Christ Church in the Christian faith. There was a large and fashionable assembly present and Blackburn was heartily congratulated.
