THE CONVICTION OF KRAUSE

The conviction of Edward Krause of first degree murder for slaying and robbing James Plunkett, a Juneau pioneer, is a matter for congratulation, and credit will be freely extended to United States District Attorney James A. Smiser and those who have worked under him in marshalling the evidence and presenting it to the jury, and to the unflinching perseverance of the jurors. In fact, the conduct of all the Krause cases is entirely creditable to the United States officials and the others who gathered the evidence, link by link until a chain that will lead to the scaffold, if last night's verdict stands the tests of the higher courts, was woven—and it is creditable to the citizenry that furnished the jurors and general moral support.

No one who has followed the evidence in the Krause cases can escape the conviction that one of the arch-criminals of the century was run to earth when the men who were sent on the trail of Krause after the disappearance of William Christie a little over a year ago got in their work. Five times he has been placed on trial for felonies since that time, and five convictions have resulted. It is stated that facts that would sustain 32 further indictments—37 in all—have been dug up by those who have conducted the investigations. If the theatre of the Krause career had been on the Atlantic seaboard where the population is dense, in the field of the newspapers of national fame, there would not be a hamlet in the land where his face would not be familiar to the people and where his name would not be linked with those of the master fiends of the ages. With four murders, and perhaps five, traced to his hands, and many other crimes, including robbery, forgery, impersonating an officer, impersonating his own murdered victims, and other diabolical acts, he will go down in the history of Alaska as the worst of all her criminals—not excepting "Soapy" Smith.

It adds to the feeling of security in the North to realize that we have the officials and the disposition to follow such a criminal to the bitter end. It is creditable to Southeastern Alaska citizenry that five juries have promptly and unhesitatingly found verdicts of guilty after hearing the tales of crime. In all the 60 men who have sat upon juries that have tried Krause there has been not one with maudlin or unbalanced sympathies to prevent the irresistible and unerring march of justice. The time has passed when men can murder and steal in the North with impunity.

WELCOME TO MR. GRIGSBY

Southeastern Alaska will welcome the coming of George B. Grigsby—Alaska pioneer, leading lawyer of Nome, former mayor of the Westernmost American municipality, idol of the people of Seward Peninsula, and fine Alaska citizen. Mr. Grigsby, who arrived in the capital city last night, will open his campaign in the First Division with a speech here tomorrow night at the Coliseum, where he will handle the issues of the campaign without gloves. He is said to be the best platform speaker in the Territory. His personality is attractive. His ability undisputed.

Mr. Grigsby is the candidate of the Democratic party for Attorney-General of the Territory of Alaska, and he brings with him to this Division a reputation, earned by hard work and retaining by unflinching integrity of purpose, second to none in Alaska. The voters of Juneau should not miss the opportunity to hear him. He will tell them many things that they should know. And, his standing in the Territory as a former official, a citizen and a candidate for high office, entitle him to a hearing from those of all political parties.

The Coliseum should be filled to overflowing Friday night.

DISARMAMENT IN TEXAS

We imagine that the freeborn citizens of Texas will read with considerable interest a suggestion from New London, Conn., that neutral zones, 30 miles wide on each side of the border be established and patrolled jointly by the troops of Mexico and the United States, the inhabitants on both sides to be disarmed. It is said this suggestion comes from the Mexican commissioners, and if it does, we conclude that they have not reckoned sufficiently upon Texas. The people down there are inclined to be proud and stand upon their constitutional rights, one of which is to bear arms. They have not been invading Mexico and the State has exhibited no incapacity to hold its people to an observance of the rights of Mexico. Therefore Texas is very likely to inquire why a strip of its territory 20 miles wide and as long as the international boundary should be put under martial law. We fancy the inquiry will be difficult to answer.

The Fairbanks Times, urging people to be Republicans, says the Republican party has been Alaska's good friend and that it is the party that is pledged to Alaska's welfare. So? The Republican National platform does not mention Alaska. Candidate Hughes devoted 20 words to the Territory in his Seattle speech, and then to say only that he would like to see the Territory developed. In the East Republican campaign orators are attacking the Wilson administration for its extravagance in building a $35,000,000 railroad in the Territory.

Democrats should not fail to attend the meeting of the Juneau Democratic Club tonight. Those who attend will have an opportunity to meet Mr. Grigsby, the party nominee for Attorney-General.

Save Friday night for the Grigsby rally—at the Coliseum—it will be free to all.

COAL FROM ALASKA

(New York Times)
Now there is news from Alaska of more importance to our people, and possibly more interesting, than the report about the work of Stefansson's Canadian exploring expedition that was sent to the Times from Nome last week by Dr. Anderson. He and his associates are bringing to Seattle, with a collection of Eskimo folklore and cat's cradle games, some specimens of copper which they found. But the copper deposits are not in the United States Territory, being situated a little east of Alaska, and they have no commercial value because they are practically inaccessible. We have an abundance of copper in Alaska, at places where it can easily be mined and shipped to our Pacific coast states, which received $26,000,000 worth of it last year. And we also have in Alaska an enormous quantity of coal. The news we are going to say something about relates to this coal and a railroad.

The first trainload of coal from the famous and very extensive Matanuska coal field was brought down by rail to tidewater, at Anchorage, a distance of seventy-one miles, on the 16th. This railroad is a new one that our government has been building with money appropriated by Congress. When the Matanuska mines or deposits were reached last week the achievements were celebrated with as much warmth of appreciation as could be found in so cold a country. A party of enthusiastic citizens was carried to the coal fields from Anchorage in a special train chartered by the little city's chamber of commerce. In this party were officers of the Engineering Commission which supervised construction of the railroad, and the Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, Bishop of Alaska. They saw the first trainload of coal beginning its journey to the port of Anchorage and a ship.

This is good news for Alaska and for the people and industries of our Pacific Coast States. There is no end of coal up there. The cost of coal in Oregon, Washington and California will be largely reduced. Last year we received nearly $67,000,000 worth of copper, canned salmon, furs, gold and silver from this great northern Territory, which was bought in 1867 for only $7,200,000. Hereafter much will be added for coal.

THE MALAMUTE

(Seward Gateway)
When we have lived for some time in Alaska we pay little attention to the extraordinary place occupied by the malamute in Alaskan life although the brute performs almost every phase of it. He is to Alaska what the camel is to Arabia. He is indigenous to the soil of the Territory. He gives local colors to stories of Alaska as a kangaroo gives it to Australia and long ago Alaska would have probably enshrined him as its national and only beloved emblem if he were only pretty enough and could conduct himself with anything approaching gentility.

It is impossible anywhere in the whole length and breadth of the Territory to get away from him. Touch at Petersburg or Wrangell or Ketchikan for the first time coming north and you hear his chorus, "Steam down the Yukon river, up the Takhina, the Tanana, any of them and the first intimation you receive that you are approaching a village comes from the malamute answer to the steamer whistle. Travel the trail and you either have him along as your best friend or you must hide your bacon to keep some stray specimen from eating it. Enter a modern town and he runs between your legs on the sidewalk.

The malamute is a peculiar beast. On the trail he is man's best friend. He has made the gold discoveries and the consequent development of the Territory possible. The malamute has opened Alaska to man. The other side of the Malamute, however, is that he is a treacherous wretch. Over and over again when he is traveling in packs he has taken human lives. Near the city of Nome a few years ago a pack almost completely devoured a boy in his teens. But he is not to blame for all this. He probably threw the boy down first in play and then saw no harm in doing the rest. He is only a dog.

In nature he is just like the Territory and its Native inhabitants. For this reason he is worth studying. He is an uncultivated type of dog as the Territory and the Territory's Natives are uncultivated. No three things in this world harmonize with such poetic perfection in their three different spheres as the wilder parts of Alaska, especially near the mouth of the Yukon, and the Native and the Malamute. Each of them is possessed of an uncanny peace of exterior and of a latent and fatal fierceness. Nothing can kill so quickly as the wilderness when it becomes aroused and the Malamutes and Natives the same holds true. The Malamute is not only indigenous to the land but he is part of it. He grows as naturally out of it as weeds grow out of uncultivated ground. Let us hope that as the country and its original inhabitants only need care to flourish the Malamute only needs the same to make him an animal of which we might be proud.

Wickersham was a good Delegate, probably, ten years ago. But times are changing rapidly and Wick is as far behind the times as it is possible for a man to be and draw his salary. Our opposition to him is derived from the fact that the Territory needs new blood. Sulzer would be more popular in a Republican Congress and wield more influence in matters pertaining to the good of the Territory than would Wick, who is living in the dim and "muddy" past. A business administration calls for a business man at the head of Territorial affairs. Wickersham is not a business man; he belongs to the old school of demagogic politicians; Sulzer has made a success of his business as a miner; Wickersham has made a failure of his business as a politician. Is it wise to continue to waste our time in Congress by electing a man who has nothing to commend him in the past but his faculty for making enemies?—(Valdez Prospector.)

It should always be remembered that people make resources; resources never make people although they attract them. A country's resources are not what is lying latent in the earth but are what the people can produce from the earth. Get the people and you can get everything the country has. Alaska might have to import certain articles as every country has to import but she can export meat as well as Argentina or Australia, timber as well as Norway, and a thousand other commodities as well as other countries. But Alaska will have new resources that we do not now dream of if the people were only here to find them and develop them.—(Seward Gateway.)
