QUALIFICATIONS OF SENATOR TANNER

THE technical point urged by those of Skagway that would prevent Senator J. M. Tanner from acting as a member of the City Council at that place seems far-fetched. They are upon an ordinance that requires a member of the City Council to be a registered voter, and, because of the fact that his duties as a member of the Territorial Senate prevented, Senator Tanner did not get to Skagway so as to register for the municipal election that took place last Tuesday. It is urged that this disqualifies him to serve, notwithstanding that he was re-elected to the Council by a vote of almost two to one. No one questions but that Mr. Tanner is a citizen of Skagway, and he has registered several times since the passage of the ordinance.

After a vexatious experience with the floods that held him up at Pittsburgh for several days, Chairman Hugh C. Todd, of the Democratic State Central Committee, has returned to Seattle filled with characteristic optimism. He says the President will appoint those Democrats the organization has recommended to office in the State of Washington.

THE APPOINTMENT OF WALLACE

THE appointment of Hugh C. Wallace to be ambassador to France does not improve the American service in the way the average man would like to have it improved. Wallace's chief claim to fame rests upon his great wealth and the fact that the late Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller was his father-in-law. He always has been closely associated with the monied interests. He supported Palmer and Buckner in 1896 and he has always opposed Bryan with his influence and money. He did all within his power to defeat the nomination of Wilson last year, and solely because Wilson was the candidate of the progressive Democrats. However, he gave the ticket loyal support after the Baltimore convention, and the association with progressive Democrats since that time might have worked a change in his attitude toward things political that has not been noticed out in the West. Anyhow, there is satisfaction in the knowledge that his boss while in office will be Bryan.

All protectionists, whether Louisiana Democrats or Pennsylvania Republicans, look alike to President Wilson. He has decreed that the sugar growers cannot write a tariff schedule that will be unfair to the sugar users.

THEORY OF THE MEXICAN REBELLION

THE northern states of Mexico—Sonora, Sinaloa, Coahuila and Chihuahua—with Gov. Carranza, of Sonora, at their head are in "constitutional revolt," according to the declaration which they have sent forth. They have separated themselves from the remainder of Mexico, and the state machinery is being used by the revolutionists. In fact, the customs houses are pretty generally in their hands, and the public revenues are being used to maintain armies in the field that control most of the tetratorial area within their boundaries. They acted in most part through their legislative bodies and state officers. Therefore, there is a rebellion in progress that is of a geographical character such as that which prevailed during the American Civil War.

The "constitutionalists," so-called, have announced that they will not attempt to invade other sections of Mexico, but that they will resist any attempt at coercion of their states on the part of Huerta. However, the announcement says that their action does not contemplate the permanent independence of their states, "except so long as it might be necessary to guarantee national constitutionalism."

It all sounds peculiar to an American, but is probably good logic in Mexico. The situation seems to be that the people of Northern Mexico are still believers in the tenets of Madero. They believe that his removal was accomplished in violation of the constitution, and that it is not the purpose of Huerta to pay attention to the constitution that, theoretically at least, makes the power of the citizens supreme in that country. They look upon the dead Madero as a statesman that was doing his best to establish the reign of the people. They know that the constitution was a dead letter during the rule of Diaz and that the adherents and supporters of Diaz are the men that are now closest to Huerta. They feel that to continue Huerta in control would be to return to a personal government, such as that given Mexico by Diaz, or at best, it would mean an oligarchy where a small group of men would exercise all authority without reference to or regard for the people. They believe that it would be a government where death by execution or assassination would be the penalty for criticism. If that is what Southern Mexico would prefer, then the Northerners are for separation until those of the South change their minds.

SHORT PARAGRAPHS CONCERNING ALASKA

(From "Alaska, an Empire in the Making," by J. J. Underwood. Published by permission of Dodd, Mead & Company.)

One mine in Alaska has produced four times as much gold as the United States paid for the entire territory. This mine, the Treadwell, operates the second largest stamp mill in the world. Boers property on the Witwatersrand, South Africa, is its only competitor.

Alaska contains approximately twenty-one million acres of coal lands. Of this amount thirty-two thousand acres were staked by the men who discovered these lands. According to the estimates of competent engineers and geologists, the coal in Alaska is sufficient to sustain the people of the United States for 5,300 years at the present rate of consumption.

During the past ten years, the commerce of Alaska with the United States—in and out—has amounted to more than $500,000,000, several millions more than the trade of the United States with the Orient.

The mineral production of Alaska from 1883 to 1910 amounted to $205,000,000, more than $195,000,000 of this amount being in gold. The average weight of gold taken out of Alaska—roughly figured—is a little more than four hundred tons. This does not include several million dollars in gold brought to the United States by the Americans from the Klondike region.

Since the occupation by the citizens of the United States, Alaska has yielded in fishery products—walrus, ivory, aquatic furs, whalebone and fish—to the value of $210,000,000. The food fishes at the close of the
