THUNDER OF CANNON ALARMS PROSPECTORS

FAIRBANKS, April 27. — Mushing along the Toklat river by dog team Monday morning at 5:30 o'clock, Robert Benner and William Speedy, prospectors, heard rumbling.

They stopped the team and listened to the remarkable series of noises, lasting two and one-half minutes. The noises continued and resembled the booming of cannon, only sharper, and were followed closely in succession by lesser noises, like rattle of musketry. The men thought war had broken loose on the Southern coast and a foreign army was invading. There was no movement of the earth, precluding the possibility of earthquake. After the rumbling ceased the men continued, dumfounded and mystified. Others in the same vicinity heard the noises and believed it was a subterranean disturbance.
