DOUGLAS FIRE BURNS TO THE GROUND
DOUGLAS, Jan. 24—Fire destroyed a residence on St. Ann's avenue, belonging to Mat Halin, and situated near the hospital at 9:30 o'clock this morning, making the third fire within a week. The house was occupied by an Italian named Giovanetti, who was asleep in the building when the fire was discovered. He was awakened by neighbors and made his escape.
The alarm was first sounded on the St. Ann's avenue bell, and repeated by the Douglas alarm bell. The two chemicals and three hose carts of the Douglas fire department responded immediately and were soon at work on the fire. They were followed by Treadwell firemen, who brought a chemical into action.
The fire laddies made a stubborn fight to save the building, but the blaze got too much a start. The building is a total wreck, but by hard work the buildings next to it were saved.

FAIRBANKS' DREAM THAT IS COMING TRUE
There is an old love song entitled, "When Dreams Come True." The sentiment is beautiful, but who is there that believes that they do?
Yet Fairbanks dreamed of a railroad long years ago. It was only a dream, though, and dismissed as such. The first one to make his dream publicly known, remarked that he would stay in the interior until he could ride out on the cars. He is still in the interior.
But this is one of the dreams which is coming true. When Congress convenes again in a few days, the Alaska railroad bill is first on the docket. It has passed through the preliminary fires, its weak points have been strengthened, it has no determined opposition, and we are only waiting for the news of its passage to flash West and North.
Then the real stampede to Alaska will begin. It will, of course, be no such rough and tumble affair as the days of '98, but North in search of homes will come the sturdy stock from the United States, a steady influx of settlers and investors that will double the population before the road is completed.
Again 'tis opportune to say to the old-timers who have never been able to make a clean-up, now is the moment to cast about for something to seize onto. This is legitimate. You are entitled to it. It is not a case of preying upon "suckers" who may be attracted North; it is a case of realizing on property that can be worked when transportation becomes cheap—when the dream of Alaska comes true.—Fairbanks Citizen.
