DR. GULICK'S IDEAS TO BE DISCUSSED TONIGHT

The nucleus of the views of Dr. Gulick, head of the Camp Fire Girls movement, which will form the basis of the discussion at the Draper Club meeting, which will take place at Miss Gulick's studio this evening, is found in the recognition of the fact that while many for years thinking people in this country have been bending their interest and energies toward organization and systematization of industrial affairs, continually weighing and comparing methods and results in the effort to find that scheme which will be most efficient, the great majority of those same "thinking people" have given little serious thought to the need for social organization and systematization.

ALLEGED SLAYERS ON STAND

had quarreled with Kajita while on his way north with the foreman and the Japanese crew, and although he admitted having been struck by Kajita in a fight in the bunk house a few nights before Kajita was killed, he said that he had no enmity for the foreman as a result of the fight and that he was "not the kind of a man to hold a grudge."

Story Is Unshaken.

Under a grilling cross-examination, conducted by Deputy District Attorney Polson, Yamashita's story was not altered. He repeated that Kajita's hand had held a pistol, and that he believed he was saving Yamaguchi's life by grabbing the foreman.

Over the objection of District Attorney Reardon, a map which was drawn by Hermit under the defendant's directions, and purporting to show the location of buildings and walks at Sitkoh Bay was introduced as the defendant's exhibit A.

A ripple of laughter was caused when the defendant, in trying to tell Judge Jennings the only difference he could see between the chart and the actual eye-picture of the Sitkoh Bay cannery, was that "one is a house, and this is a picture."

Tanaka Corroborated.

The governments case was closed at 2:30 yesterday afternoon, at the conclusion of Mr. Hellenenthal's cross-examination of Yousaki. Preceding Tanaka on the stand were Dr. H. C. DeVigne, Walter Kamseyer, Akabano, and Tanaka. Yousaki corroborated the testimony of Tanaka that Kajita had no gun when he pointed an accusing finger at Yamaguchi.

Gov. Strong Knew What Full Territorial Form of Government Meant.

Continuing, Delegate Wickersham said: "Now on the other matter, about the Territorial Legislature, the Governor says: 'The powers conferred upon the Territorial Legislature by the organic act passed by Congress and approved August 24, 1912, are extremely limited, and in view of the growing importance of this Territory, and its industrial and commercial development, both of which give promise of great expansion in the future, the powers of the Legislature should be enlarged. This industrial and commercial expansion has already begun along substantial and permanent lines, largely because of the wise and liberal policy which this administration has adopted toward this Territory; and the relief that this policy assures from the hitherto intolerable conditions that harassed the Territory and prevented the development of its many natural resources, Alaska, therefore, should be given a full Territorial form of government, equal in all respects to that which is enjoyed by the other Territories of the Republic and under which they rose to the dignity of statehood. Under enlarged powers no additional expense to the Federal government would be entailed, and matters which properly belong to the legislative functions of the local legislature could be dealt with in a way suited to the needs and requirements of the Territory.'

DELEGATE SAYS HE IS DEMOCRAT

gressional directory issued in December does not classify the Delegate. In Southeastern Alaska, at least, and reports have it that the same thing was the case in other sections of the Territory, the major portion of Delegate Wickersham's support came from Republicans and those who oppose the Democratic party and the administration. Most of his newspaper support came from the anti-Democratic element.

Favors Territorial Control.

Delegate Wickersham followed this statement by an argument in favor of the control of the fur and game animals of Alaska by the Territory of Alaska, and in doing it he supported his argument by declarations of President Woodrow Wilson and Gov. J. F. A. Strong in favor of "full Territorial government" for Alaska. The committee was considering a bill extending the authority of the Department of Commerce over fur and game animals for Alaska.

The printed report of the hearings before the ways and means subcommittee contains the following, appearing just after the political statement given above:

(Wickersham speaking):—I want to call your attention to his (President Wilson's) message of December 2, 1912 at page 9, in speaking of the Alaskan railway bill which he very greatly approved and strongly supported, and which particularly appealed to us—

"The Chairman—And which passed. 'Mr. Wickersham—And passed with your assistance and with the assistance of the Republicans and Progressives also. He (President Wilson), said:

"The people of Alaska should be given full Territorial form of government."

"I have had a great deal of doubt about just what this means—

"The People of Alaska Should Be Given the Full Territorial Form of Government."

"Standing alone it does not mean as much to me as it does if it stands in connection with what he said under the Alaskan railway bill. And it has been taken as a text by the people of Alaska, and they have supported Mr. Wilson very strongly and very largely on account of that little text. We have a full Territorial form of government in Alaska now. We have a Governor appointed by the President of the United States and confirmed by the Senate, as well as all the other Territories have had. We have a legislature elected by the people, with the usual limitations and powers given them, and we have the same system of courts as the other Territories have had. Mr. Wilson knew all of that when he made that statement, and we in Alaska have concluded unambiguously by that statement that Mr. Wilson meant it was desirable that a wider range of power be given to the people of Alaska in building up and developing that country. It is a great country, and it has immense resources of all kinds in it, and we have a strong, healthy vigorous, virile people up there trying to develop it and do something with it. But when we got the Alaska Legislature under the organic act giving that legislative authority, we found so many blocks and checks in it that we were discouraged and under this statement of President Wilson's we felt that we were going to get some of those blocks and checks removed and enable the people up there not only to develop the country, but to develop the popular government of the people, by the people, and for the people * * *
