STOCK FARMING IS VERY SUCCESSFUL IN TANANA REGION

"Any doubt as to the actual possibility of raising stock in the Yukon-Tanana country" writes Hugo G. Bennett in his recent report to the Department of Agriculture, "is easily removed by the fact that fine specimens of cattle and hogs are raised there, and that successful dairies are operated. The same point is also gained by the fact that large quantities of native grass and grain hay, as well as vetch, root crops and other forms of forage are produced with no difficulty whatever. Cattle and hogs can be raised on the products of the region, and the vast extent of land adapted to the production of necessary feed points to the possibility of successfully establishing important industries in the raising of stock or dairying or both. Dairying appears to be the most promising industry, but there seems to be no doubt that sufficient meat for home consumption could be locally produced.

The rigors of the winter climate do not constitute so serious an obstacle to stock raising as might be supposed. In the warm barns such as have been constructed of spruce logs, well chinked with moss, stock seem to get along comfortably. It is true that stock must be maintained by feeding 7 or 8 months in the year; that is, where not provided with winter grass grazing such as wild peas of the region have afforded in many instances, but this is the only way to make use of a great quantity of valuable forage the country is capable of producing, and the crops of native grasses than annually go to absolute waste. This forage can not be exported profitably and to be used at all must be utilized in the production of beef, products, and pork. It must be understood that this is not a stock-raising region in the sense that cattle can be turned upon vast ranges, to care for themselves until ready for the roundup and market. Good grazing is available nearly everywhere during the months of June, July, and August, and ordinarily through a part of May and September, while browse consisting of frost-bitten vegetation will be available in many years through October and perhaps a part of November, but stockmen must be prepared to feed at least 7 months of the year, and they must have efficient means for housing all stock against the severe cold. As already pointed out, the country is fully capable of meeting this demand for feed; it only remains then, for those entering the business to employ the ordinary means of laying out necessary supplies of feed and providing shelter. Notwithstanding the fact that the region is capable of producing much more beef than the present population requires—more than a vastly larger population would require—not enough is produced to supply more than a small fraction of the present demand. The meat product of the section at the present time is mostly pork and veal raised scatteringly by a few roadhouse keepers, farmers or dairymen. While considerable milk and butter are produced, the output is but a comparatively unimportant part of that used by the present population. The largest dairy farm visited by Mr. Bennett was that of C. F. Tickler of Fairbanks. In September there were on this farm 25 cows, 2 bulls, and several calves. Nineteen of the cows were giving milk. There were Durham, Jersey, Holstein and grades of these breeds. Milk was being sold at $1 per gallon, cream at $1 per pint, and butter at 75 cents per pound. Three of the best milk cows at this dairy were raised on the farm. Most of the calves were sold for veal. The Yukon-Tanana region, is thus demonstrably one of considerable stock raising and dairying possibilities. There is opportunity for an immediate extension of these industries to meet the demands of the present population for beef and dairy products, and probably for pork. The profitability of shipping stock of meat to outside markets is somewhat problematical, at least under present conditions of transportation. It may be possible, however, to carry the industry to such a stage of development that such shipments can be made profitably when cheaper transportation is available. Exportation of the more concentrated products, butter and cheese, is even more promising of success. Chickens and ducks do well. A considerable number of flocks of the Rhode Island Red and Plymouth Rock breeds are kept. Indian Runner ducks were seen. Ranch eggs were selling at this time of reconnaissance at $1.50 per dozen and cold storage eggs imported at 75 cents per dozen.
