Baboon Yields a Promising Clue In Fight Against Heart Disease

HEART FUND DOLLARS are being used to help support medical research looking toward discovery of the reasons why a wild, vegetarian African baboon (left) develops arterial tissue changes somewhat similar to those associated with "hardening of the arteries" in humans—a leading cause of heart disease. Dr. Jack F. Strong of Louisiana State University School of Medicine, above, studies a baboon's diseased aorta. Research is the primary aim of the Heart Fund. Give generously to the Heart Fund when a volunteer calls at your home on Heart Sunday, February 28.
