Lake Is Named

"Mission Lake," the name used in describing the lake which is situated almost two miles northeast of Kodiak on Mission Road, became its official nomenclature this week, when it was adopted by the Domestic Names Committee of the Board of Geographic Names, U. S. States, Department of the Interior.

In a letter received by William Stone, Superintendent of the Kodiak Baptist Mission, from J. O. Kilmartin, Executive Secretary of the Board, Mr. Kilmartin stated the name was approved July 15. He said it will read on the Decision List as follows:

Mission Lake: lake about 0.2 mile across, on Kodiak Island about 1.8 miles northeast of Kodiak; named for the Kodiak Baptist Mission for neglected and indigent Alaskan children, which is located on this lake; Alaska; 57 degrees 48' 08" N., 152 degrees 21' 45" W.

3 Court Cases

Joseph F. Slevin appeared before the Deputy Magistrate this week on a drunk and disorderly charge and was fined $50.

Two others, Jerry L. Sanders, were arrested on a disorderly conduct charge, and Pete Pestrikoff, on a drunk charge. Sanders was released on payment of $50 bail and Pestrikoff $25 bail, both of which were forfeited.

Labor Secretary Contrasts U. S.-Soviet Manpower

WASHINGTON — Under Secretary of Labor James T. O'Connell said the Soviet Union now uses a labor force of 105 million to "carry" an additional 109 million members of its population, while the United States uses a labor force of only 73 million to carry 107 million nonworkers.

"Of particular interest in our comparative manpower structures," Mr. O'Connell said, "is the fact that almost all of the gap in size between the two labor forces can be accounted for by the use of Russian women." He cited statistics showing that women represent 85 per cent of the Soviet work force in the health field, 66 per cent in trade, 63 per cent in education, 62 per cent in communications, and 57 per cent in agriculture.

Mr. O'Connell pointed out that a major manpower problem to be shared by both countries in the next decade seems certain to be one of effective utilization of large numbers of youth first coming of working age.

Explaining that in the U. S. S. R. "working age" begins at 15 while it is more often about 18 in the U. S., he noted that both countries show a changing pattern in the relative availability of this manpower source.

"In 1950 the rate of availability of new young workers in the U. S. S. R. was roughly twice that of our crop," the under secretary said. "But today we see their 1960 total something like 300,000 below ours. The pattern is again going to undergo change, however, because birth rates in the U. S. S. R. rose dramatically after the ravages of World War II had ended. By about 1962 we are going to pull even at a rate of around 2.8 million new workers for the year, and by 1970 the Soviets will again be outnumbering us by about 5 to 4."

"It is in this area of the manpower challenge, and in this decade ahead," Mr. O'Connell observed, "that much of what will be the future economic strength of the two nations will be determined. For us, the meaning should be clear. It spells out in terms of more and better education for our youngsters, of higher numbers of them engaged in training for the development of a productive skill, and —above all—in terms of an all-out attack on the appalling national problem of the school dropout."
