STILL ANOTHER CARD TOURNAMENT

Another cribbage tournament has been organized. It is composed of members of the White Pass Athletic club and is called the "Boiler Room Cribbage Tournament." It gets its name from the fact that the rules require that all the games be played in the boiler room of the club. An entrance fee of 25 cents was charged and the money will go for the purpose of securing a prize for the winner of the tournament.

Will Cleveland has the list of the players. He is closely followed by Roy Ferguson.

FIRST DEBATE ON TONIGHT

The first debate in the Skagway Literary and Debating Society for this season will take place this evening. The society will meet at the Presbyterian church and the question for debate is the following resolution:

"Resolved, That commercial reciprocity between the United States and Canada would be beneficial to both countries."

Elias Reed will lead for the affirmative and Dr. John Parsons for the negative. Each will select his own assistants and there will be a general discussion of the question after the debate shall have been concluded by the leaders.

There will be a musical and literary program.

BROUGHT TO LIGHT

Alaska People Receiving the Full Benefit

There have been many cases like the following in Alaska. These plain, straightforward statements will do much toward relieving the suffering of thousands. Such testimony will be read with interest by many people.

P. A. Johnson, carpenter, 4840 South I street, Tacoma, Wash., says: "For a year or so I took different medicines trying to strengthen my kidneys, but my efforts were unsuccessful and I grew worse instead of better and trouble with the kidney secretions came to be a positive annoyance. I need not give minute particulars and what cured me is of more importance. I got Doan's Kidney Pills and took a course of the treatment. I can honestly say I have not felt a pain in my back nor had any annoyance from too frequent action of the kidneys since I stopped the use of this medicine."

THE MAN WITH A HEAD

(Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis.)

There were three drug stores in Liverpool, and Liverpool had about 7,000 inhabitants. There was a good deal about the town and more about the stores which might be called old-fashioned. In addition to drugs and fancy articles each store dealt in outside goods. One was half grocery, another had boots and shoes and the third sold agricultural implements and Ohio carriages, and its proprietor was also interested in a spring bed and patent churn. If any man had declared his belief that a straight out drug store would pay expenses he would have been called a fool in answer. Things had been going on in this mixed up way for many years when a stranger appeared in town and began loafing around the drug stores. He was a curiosity and a subject of gossip, and most of the gossipers whittled away at pine shingles and decided that he didn't amount to no great shakes. The only citizen who sized him up correctly was Uncle Eben Schenckhorn. He took his time about it and chewed up half a plug of tobacco before he said: "Want, boys, I hain't givin' no opinion as to how 'aters will pan out this fall, but as to that stranger, he's got a head on him. Yes, s'pose, you can see that he's got a head on him."

"Of course he's got a head on him, but what of it?" asked one of his hearers. "Never you mind—never you mind," replied Uncle Eben as he winked his left eye and nodded his head in a knowing way. "When the band begins to play and the Bengal tiger to roar you jest remember that I said he had a head on him."

After a few days the band struck up—that is, the stranger bought out Druggist White. The roar of the Bengal followed—that is, again Mr. Harper, the new man, decided to get rid of grindstones, corn shellers, patent churns, groceries, confectionery and top buggies and run a drug store by itself. He was called a fool by some and a lunatic by others, and the rest of the town predicted that he would go to the wall in less than three months.

Mr. Harper visited all the business houses and assured their proprietors that he didn't propose to carry any of their lines. That announcement appealed to their selfish interests, and he made a score of friends at once. He brought on his family and divided his custom evenly around in the matter of meats, groceries and dry goods. That increased his list of friends. He changed the interior of his store all over, put in a display window and a soda fountain and one day was ready for business. Business came, but not with a rush. People wanted to "wait and see."

The other druggists were aroused and meant to hang on to their customers. Mr. Harper might be all right, but he was cutting a wide swath for Liverpool. One day he dropped into the Weekly Herald office and had a confidential chat with the editor. When he left it was to go over to the Banner and have another confidential chat. Uncle Eben knew nothing about these visits, but a day or two later when some one remarked in his hearing that the druggist with a head wasn't taking in a barrel of money per day the old man bit a fresh hunk off his plug and replied:

"Don't you worry your gizzard about that new feller. I was in his store last night after some sulphur, and I saw sunthin' in his eye that told me there was a hen on."

The "hen" betrayed herself when the next issue of the Herald appeared. In a double headed article, nearly two columns long, it attacked the new druggist in savage style. It purported to give his history for many years past, and about the pleasantest thing it said of him was that he was an escaped convict. That article was written by Mr. Harper himself, and he paid $15 for its insertion. The excitement around town was added to a day later when the druggist sued the Herald for $100,000 damages. It got still another boost when the Banner came out with a two column article and denied each and every charge of its esteemed contemporary. It did more. It boldly announced that the editor of the Herald had spent six months in an Ohio jail for stealing hogs. The libeled editor at once sued for heavy damages and called the other man a thief, robber and pirate.

There were a thousand people in Liverpool who said that Mr. Harper ought to be arrested and who wondered why it wasn't done, but at the same time at least half of them sneaked into his store to get a closer look at him and, of course, bought more or less. Sheriff's were even sent for from the surrounding counties in hope that he might be identified, but it was remarked that they all looked silly after leaving his store. Reporters came from some of the big dailies, but never a note did they jot down in their books.

When the excitement had continued for two months it somehow leaked out that it had all been created by Mr. Harper in the way of advertising. Indeed an announcement was made to this effect in both papers, and in those respective issues the hustling druggist had three full page advertisements. A few citizens were mad, but most of them were enthusiastic, and there was only one drug store in Liverpool after that. Farmers would drive eight miles to buy rochele salts at Harper's, and the townspeople kept his fingers sore making change.

"I hain't predictin' about the weather next winter," said Uncle Eben, "nor the grasshoppers next summer, but I'm sorter givin' you a hint that we've got a druggist in this town with a head on him." M. QUAD.
