NOT SO

There Is no Boycot on Pink Salmon

The Pacific Fisherman, the salmon packers' official paper, questions the statement printed in these columns that an agreement has been entered into by Alaska packers to curtail the output of pink salmon. It concedes, however, that there will be a greater reduction in the pack of that variety of salmon than in any other variety this year.

The Fisherman says:

"The Skagway Daily Alaskan prints the following: 'Word comes from Seattle that the salmon canners have entered into an agreement not to operate any of the Southeastern Alaskan canneries that pack pink salmon. The purpose is to boom reds and sockeyes by ignoring all other varieties.' No advice is obtainable regarding any agreement entered into by the cannerymen in regard to pink salmon. The canners have individually decided to curtail their packs on account of conditions that might make them unprofitable. The pack on Puget sound promises to be large, and it is probable that the entire Alaskan pack of both pinks and reds will be restrained to some extent on this account. It is true that many of the canneries that will not operate this year, however, are those which pack for the most part pink salmon."

DISCRIMINATING LADIES.

Enjoy Using Herpicide on Account of Its Distinctiveness.

The ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide speak of it in the highest terms, for its quick effect in cleansing the scalp of dandruff and also for its excellence as a general hair-dressing. It makes the scalp feel fresh and it allays that itching which dandruff will cause. Newbro's Herpicide effectively cures dandruff, as it destroys the germ that causes it. The same germ causes hair to fall out, and later baldness; in killing it, Herpicide stops falling hair and prevents baldness. It is also an ideal hair dressing, for it lends an aristocratic charm to the hair that is quite distinctive. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c. in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich.

ONE REASON

Sitka Paper Tells Why We Fail

[Sitka Cablegram]

Alaska has been entreating congress for thirty years and more to grant this great area—it is nothing else—some sort of government. There is a reason why the unceasing requests have been denied, and one is given by a man who is close to the powers that be and who has through years of contact with them.

He says the east fears the growing power of the northwest and for no other reason Alaska is denied rights she would receive instanter if she lay on the Atlantic rather than on the Pacific coast. Territorial government would be the stepping stone to state government, and that would carry with it increased opposition from the northwest for the eastern congressmen to contend with.

At first glance it seems preposterous that members of the governing bodies of the great United States government would deny privileges accorded by the constitution in order to preserve sectional supremacy, but to the man who has had practical experience in modern politics, the above explanation seems to be the best one yet given of Alaska's distress.

New Strike on Portland Canal

Two prospectors, J. Esch and J. Lyden have lately made a very rich find at the head of Portland Canal. They discovered a gold bearing ledge about 8 feet, wide and from surface indications think they have a bonanza. The location is about 20 miles from shore on the American side very near the boundary. Dr. G. E. Dickenson is interested with the prospectors in their find.—Ketchikan Journal

AN AMERICAN GIRL'S DEFENSE OF HER RIGHTS

[Original.]

There are a number of American women abroad whose husbands are in prominent positions, but it is only within the past decade or two that foreign men in power have chosen American wives. Before that foreigners of rank rarely married Americans, and then it was for love only. The following story narrates a case in point:

A full moon shone on a field near Berlin. A young man in the uniform of a lieutenant of artillery in the Prussian army was standing in the shadow of a tree, waiting. A carriage stopped in the road, from which alighted two women. One held back. The other went on till she came face to face with the man.

"What absurdity is this, Marion? Could you not have sent me what I have asked instead of insisting on delivering it yourself in this ridiculous fashion?"

"Count," said the woman, "you can not expect to play your own game with an American girl without paying the penalty. You sought me, not I you, and offered me your love and your hand. Finding that your ambitious schemes might be better served by marrying another, you ask for your release. I have brought with me in writing all that you can desire, a release, exonerating you from any blame whatever. But tell me, count, you whose military code compels you to fight with men at the slightest provocation, how can you expect to take up and cast aside a woman without being called to account?"

"Marion, your ways in America are not our ways. Here we owe a duty to family, to the state. There matches are made in a different way. Do not prolong the distress all this gives me. I asked for the release against my inclination six months ago. You have put me off from month to month and at last appoint a meeting here by moonlight to grant my request. Are all Americans so romantic?"

"Pardon me, count, for the delay—a delay which has been necessary in order to accede to your German customs, or, rather, that our American methods may harmonize with them. Your treatment of me I consider an insult. In Germany it is the custom to give satisfaction for insults. Having no male relatives to fight for me, it is necessary that I fight for myself. You would hardly expect me, count, to fence with you without training. The time passed since you made your request has been spent in learning how to handle a sword."

"Great heavens, Marion, what can you mean?"

"I will show you."

Dropping her cloak to the ground, she stood before him in gymnasium attire. Calling to the woman who had remained behind, a maid came forward, bringing two swords such as are used in German duels.

"There, count," continued the girl, throwing on the grass before him a paper, "is your release, and there," handing him a sword, "is something to protect you against the consequences of your asking a woman's love, then turning it aside as undesirable."

The count looked at the girl in amazement. "Marion!" he exclaimed.

"Take your weapon!"

"Never!"

"Coward!"

A flush came to the man's cheek.

"I will go through the form," he said, "and if I do not succeed in parrying your blows I shall be the victim. I will not harm you."

With this he seized the sword.

It was not long before the count found that in order to parry the girl's thrusts he must exercise all his skill. Indeed his anguish at such a situation sapped his nerve. Twice he exposed his heart, but neither time did his adversary take advantage of the opportunity. Both blades were flashing silver in the moonlight, the girl endeavoring to prick the man, he aiming only to protect himself. Finally, thinking to touch his arm lightly with her point, she lunged too far and, missing the arm, ran her sword into his breast.

"Thank heaven," he exclaimed, lowering his blade, "this business is ended! You have drawn blood. That should satisfy you."

When the fair fencer saw a red stream trickling down her opponent's vest, her sword dropped from her hand and she fell swooning into his arms. Her maid came up and, taking her from him, laid her on the grass and, satisfying herself that she was not hurt, stanched the blood in the count's wound. When the girl came out of her swoon, she saw his pale face, paler in the moonlight, bending over her.

"Sweetheart, you have been avenged. You have opened my eyes to the injustice I have put upon you. Love shall in future be my sole guide. Take back your release."

"No; your career will be blighted."

"I sacrifice it to that which is more desirable."

"The king will withdraw his favor."

"I shall take refuge in the love of my wife."

"Your family will not receive me."

"My family will receive whom I direct. I am its head."

A few weeks later all Berlin was talking of the young nobleman who had given up the advancement promised him and a brilliant career to marry a titleless and pennyless American girl. When the Franco-Prussian war came on, after repeated acts of bravery he was restored to favor and is now occupying an important position in the empire. His wife, though her marriage with him at first retarded his advancement, became of great service to him after his restoration to favor.
