'PHONE NO. 12.

Juneau is becoming so crowded that there is hardly room for either the revenue cutter or the Peniel mission.

John B. Denny, who owns valuable mining property at Sheep Creek, has obtained control of the stamp mill used several years ago at Snettisham, and will bring it to the Basin and operate his claims.—Juneau Dispatch.

The Juneau Dispatch hints that a mysterious something is about to happen to municipal officers in Douglas and perhaps federal officers as well. The Dispatch man's wisdom is only exceeded by his good looks.

Owing to the fact that after Oct. 1st there will be no bank in Skagway the White Pass & Yukon have made arrangements whereby the employees of the company may deposit their surplus earnings with the company, says the Alaskan.

A stranger in Skagway kicked a dog. The dog's master belted the stranger in the jaw and a policeman pried them apart and showed the way to the town jail. Strangers visiting Skagway for the first time should join the Arctic Brotherhood.

A dispute over the division of gold dust extracted from a claim on Gold creek, in the Cache creek district, says a Seward dispatch, led to the settlement of the difficulty by the primitive law of a miners' meeting. The lawyers were not in it and the decision was just.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer says: Grover C. Winn, '10, better known as "Ki-Ram" Winn, chief roofer of the University of Washington for several years, is now justice of the peace, corner and several other things at Juneau. He has recently been appointed United States commissioner there.

The old pioneer citizen of Haines has at last won his rights in a decision handed down by the appellate court. Col. Sol. Ripinsky was the victim of the lot jumpers when the boom struck Haines and was forced to sit quietly by while others appropriated the land he had bought and paid for. Alaskan courts gave him no relief, but after long years of patient waiting he has won at last.
