COMBINING EFFORTS ANOTHER SHIP ADDED ALL BOUND FOR SITKA. Delegations From Nome Added to the Steps Taken by Southern Alaska. Alaska Steamship Company to Put on a Freighter at once, and have a Swift Carrier in June.

Clerk Albert D. Elliot, of the district court, who was a passenger on the Cottage City en route to Sitka, thinks congress will take early action in Alaskan affairs, especially does he think the territory will early be divided into two or more judicial districts, with a new judge located at Nome.

Mr. Burns, during the summer, devoted his time exclusively to the management of the tramway, having at the opening of the season left the agency of the Alaska Steamship company in the hands of N. D. Chatham. Now that Mr. Burns has returned, Mr. Chatham will return to the Sound. He and Mrs. Chatham will get away on the Rosalie, due to day.

The Eskimo women on the ship were taken from the north as witnesses in a murder case, and are being taken to Sitka, there to be held for return to their native land next spring by the revenue cutter Bear. The interpreter that served for them in the court has gone south, and they are in the hands of the authorities without a soul that can translate their words.

The ship's company will add to its fleet a crack passenger and freighter, planned to outstrip any craft ever on the run, and being built especially for this trade. The announcement of these additions is made by Frank E. Burns, general agent in Skagway for the company and manager for the related White Horse Tramway Company, who has recently returned from a visit of several weeks to the Sound.

The officials on the ship included Judge and Mrs. Johnson, Collector of Customs J. W. Ivey, District Clerk and Mrs. Elliot, Prosecuting Attorney Fredericks, Mrs. Yule, stenographer to the prosecuting attorney; Superintendent Kelly of Alaskan schools, Chief Deputy United States Marshal McNair, and Deputy Marshal Snooks, in charge of the prisoners; Mrs. Shoup, wife of the United States Marshal, and little daughter also on board, bound for their home in Sitka.

The prisoners were E. C. Barthelet, formerly of Skagway, sentenced for a year at Sitka for assaulting a negro here; Chas. Johnson, alias "No-Account Kid," one year for theft in a Skagway resort; Harry Williams, one year for assault in Skagway; Harold Bailey, three months for assault in Juneau; Robert Wright, eight months for assault with a dangerous weapon at Dyea. A number of other criminals, all those sentenced to prison for more than a year, were sent to the government penitentiary on McNeill's Island, Puget Sound.

The prisoners were kept in the cell constructed in the stowage department especially for the accommodation of conveyance of such passengers in Alaska. The marshal, under instructions from the attorneys of Bird, refused anyone permission to speak with the condemned man. Bird was chained and sat on the upper bunk of a series. He looked anything but like a man guilty of the atrocious and premeditated murder of two fellow men. He was neatly attired and wore a studded white shirt. Leaning easily back against his pillow he crossed his feet over a high foot rail, and puffed leisurely and aristocratically at a cigar while he chatted with the other prisoners without an evident trace of care. He did not the deep brutal lines in his features, but seems bright and intelligent, and looks more like a shrewd manipulator who has gone through a restless life on the stock exchange or has been a man of fearless adventure in other walks.
