City Authorities Consider Christenson Health Case

A special meeting of the Council, Public Health Officers, Mayor and City Attorney was held last evening to try and solve the problem of Jim Christenson, baker for the North Pole Bakery, who was found to be a diphtheria carrier several months ago by the Health Department.

He made a trip to Anchorage in order to obtain a clean bill of health, at his own expense, and has lost several months work and seeks compensation. As the case is unusual, there were found to be no funds available to relieve the situation. The Health Department's Dr. Scorebrand has urged the city to try and assist Mr. Christenson and after several hours discussion the Council and local health officers decided to appeal to the Governor and Public Welfare Department to see if they could aid in the compensation of this man.

After returning from Anchorage Mr. Christenson again developed a positive throat and is at present not working. He has been given some penicillin treatments which have proven successful, and as soon as he has had another test will no doubt be allowed to return to work.

Seamen Rescue Comrade In Bering

struggling Johnson and pull him to the ship's side. Crewmen lowered ropes to hoist them aboard but the icy waters made Connally's hands so numb he couldn't lash the rope around his mate.

Seaman A. G. Howard, Montgomery, Alabama, jumped overboard and knotted the rope around the weary Johnson, who was pulled to the deck. Connally and Howard were hoisted aboard a moment later.

Johnson has been in the water fully eight minutes. Medics said he would have perished had there been any delay, as twelve minutes is regarded as the limit a human can withstand Bering Sea waters.
