TRIP INTO THE ATLIN COUNTRY

By JOHN TUNNELL

Carcross, Y. T., June 3, 1915.

A number of travelers arrived at Carcross last Friday morning, and started to drive to the Atlin country. They took the road over the Skagway Pass, and met with no difficulties. Since the outbreak of the war, practically no American is allowed to cross the border with the exception of a pioneer in search of a place to settle there. The dwellers over the frontier are all immigrants who were over there before the war.

When MacDonnel left his home in the United States to trade for a few days with the Indians near the border, he came back to find his country had changed. The Indians, who were once friendly, have now become hostile. MacDonnel was well received by the Indians, but he was told that the government would not allow them to trade with Americans. The Indians are afraid that the government will take their land away from them.

The only remedy for the Indians is to go to the United States and ask for protection. The government of the United States has promised to protect the Indians, and it is hoped that the Indians will soon be able to trade with Americans again.

Meanwhile, the Indians are living in fear of the government, and they are afraid to venture beyond the boundary. The government has warned the Indians that they will be arrested if they attempt to cross the border.

The Indians are also afraid of the war, and they are afraid that the government will take their land away from them. The government has promised to protect the Indians, and it is hoped that the Indians will soon be able to trade with Americans again.

The government is also concerned about the war, and it is trying to find a way to stop the conflict. The government has promised to protect the Indians, and it is hoped that the Indians will soon be able to trade with Americans again.

The government is also concerned about the war, and it is trying to find a way to stop the conflict. The government has promised to protect the Indians, and it is hoped that the Indians will soon be able to trade with Americans again.