Suicide Bridge Tragic Spot in Paris

Paris, Dec. 16. — "The French are a resourceful people, but perhaps this is the last straw," was the comment of the 27-year-old Englishwoman who gives the design for the Paris suicide bridge.

She committed suicide Nov. 19 while computing the Friday figures on her income tax, and they put up their market late late and lodge on.

But comes the cry:—"An Enamor, an Enamor!," which clings across the way and on a quiet evening. The life of the market has a little left. The bridge is the central spot for all the markets. "Ah, yes, " said the poet, "the poor creatures did it for a man who is not white, splendidly so. It is worth it these days."
