ALASKA WANTS NO TRUSTEE

Secretary Payne is quoted as saying that the government will make Seattle the "trustee for Alaska." That probably was not meant to be taken literally. It was metaphor rather than plain statement. At any rate Alaska wants no "trustee." What the territory wants is opportunity to develop. And it is fair to say here, notwithstanding the presence in Seattle most of the time of a lot of politicians who would delight in serving as trustee for the people of this territory, the real Seattle does not want to be "trustee" to Alaska. What Alaska needs of Seattle, and what the real Seattle is trying to do for Alaska, is for that city to serve in the capacity of a big brother rather than as a trustee or a guardian. We want Seattle to help us fight our battles with congress and for recognition in the world of trade and industry and finance. We want Seattle's aid in getting capital to use in development, and we promise her all who give such ample protection and generous returns.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE TOURIST TRADE

The statement that the tourist trade has been worth $20,000,000 to British Columbia this year conveys a lesson that Alaskans and American transportation companies should learn. British Columbia is a wonderful country, and possesses appealing attractions for tourists. Yet Alaska's scenic grandeur and beauty is even greater. If Alaska had transportation facilities and accommodations that were equal to those of British Columbia the tourist trade would be worth as much to this territory as it is to the Canadian province.

There is no line of business that produces better profits than that of catering to tourists. It was through the tourist business more than anything else that Southern California was developed, and it contributed largely to the rapid growth and development of Florida. It has done even more for large sections of Europe, and the summer tourist trade usually is greater than that of winter.

Twenty million dollars is a large sum of money. There has been but one or two years in the history of Alaska when the gold output reached this amount. Such a traffic is worth going after, and going after strong. Give Alaska adequate transportation facilities and accommodations for those who would come here, and another industry will have been added that will take rank with our fishing, mining and paper and pulp.

ECONOMY OF TIME

President Kerr of Oregon Agricultural college did well to emphasize, in his address to the student body, the old fashioned virtue of economy, and he scored an additional point in suggesting that there may be thrift in the expenditure of time as well as money.

It is one of the minor tragedies of life, however, that youth in general is inclined to learn its own lessons in its own way. Experience continues in its capacity of teacher to be as dear as the copy book maxim represents it to be, and people continue, as Benjamin Franklin once said, to refuse to learn in any other school. The waste, or otherwise, of money by the young men and women just entering their college years will be a matter of small concern by comparison with the disposition they make of their time; a relatively small waste of money can be atoned for by a later accession of energy, while wasted time in college days will not be recouped because it is then that the mind is most plastic and best able to receive impressions of lasting value, and to form habits that will persist through life.

That it is probably not too much to say that if the colleges taught nothing else than the value of time they would justify their existence and be worth all they cost. Who is there among the inefficient and ambitious who does not envy the leaders among us who, although always busy, nevertheless can find time for one more task? And who is there who, on reading the biography of a successful man, is not struck with the circumstance that time thrift has bulked largely in the story of his life?—Oregonian.

A world congress of Quakers has declared against the League of Nations without reservations, insisted on by the American delegates, that would safeguard our sovereignty. And there is no one who will accuse the Quakers of trying to forestall peace.

A man in New York with his heart on the right side is causing wonder among the doctors, who say there is a big difference between the right side and the right place.

"High prices dull and depressed in all sections," says a market page headline. One doesn't notice much depression when he goes to buy a pair of shoes.

If the proper sphere of woman is the home, the anti-suffragists now have nothing to interfere with their returning there.

Acquisition of land by California Japanese deserves to be called an infant industry.

THINGS WE THINK

Things Others Think and What We Think of the Things Others Think.

Good luck is for the industrious.

A man without ambition is of little use to anyone for anything.

Some folks are so suspicious that they are not even sure of themselves.

The perpetual grouch is almost as much of a burden to himself as he is to others.

Some men work to earn a living for those who are always giving good advice.

Sometimes a man's creditors provide the motive power that gains for him the reputation of being a person of unusual activity.

BREAKING AWAY FROM HABIT Habit, the stern taskmaster, makes women old before their time. Because of habit, we all do work that could be done as well and as cheaply by others. Many woman have their washing done at home because of habit—the old tradition that it can be done better and more cheaply than in a modern laundry. But facts are not in line with this old belief. The scientific manner in which clothes are now washed and sterilized in a modern laundry such as ours, not only produces superior work, but actually saves you money when time, material and fuel are considered. Every week, more women are deciding that "Sending it to Jones" is the efficient way—breaking away from the old habit of home washing, with its attendant backaches, worry and slush, and now devoting this time to reading, walking, shopping or sewing. WHY NOT TRY IT? Call up PHONE 66—and send it to Jones' Laundry WE TREAT YOUR CLOTHES—WHITE
