A blacksmith's helper in East St. Louis is about to attempt a task which the foremost physicians of the country have been unable to accomplish. He proposes to restore the power of sight to Charles Broadway Rouss, the blind millionaire of New York. By dint of hard work and unusual enterprise Rouss amassed a fortune of $1,500,000. The best oculists of the country have tried in vain to restore his sight. One day last week Rouss told a New York reporter that he would willingly pay $1,000,000 to the man who would restore his sight. Charles Lindow saw the account of Rouss' promise and wrote to the afflicted New Yorker, proposing to cure him on the conditions named in the press dispatches. Lindow is a typical German blacksmith, with just a little more shrewdness than most of his class. He has a wife and seven children, and he supports them well, thanks to his knowledge of the ills that flesh is heir to. To a reporter Lindow said: "I know I can cure that New York man. I have cured others, and I ought to cure him. "I cured a man named Gregg. He was a passenger conductor, but he became so blind that he couldn't do anything but shovel cinders about the roundhouse. I took his case, and in three weeks he was back on his train. "Altogether I have cured four blind people in the last three years. "I give medicine internally for blindness, as I find that in most cases the trouble comes from the stomach. Besides the internal treatment I give the patient an eye wash to take the inflammation out. "If I get the $1,000,000, I will quit working hard and educate my six boys for the medical profession."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
