

The case of J. Clarence Brown, arrested on a charge of forging E. W. Derry's name to a check of 1,000$ on a San Francisco bank, is growing very dark and suspicious. The Consolidated bank, through which the draft was sent for collection, wired to know if Derry's draft was good for the amount drawn for, and received an answer that it was. When the draft was received, San Francisco wired that it had been paid. The Consolidated bank, as soon as it learned of the arrest of Brown, alias Derry, wired to San Francisco to scrutinize closely the signature of Derry. They wired back that there were doubts as to the genuineness of the signature.

Upon further interrogation, Brown stated he came down from Klondike some months ago, and deposited his money in bank under the name of E. W. Derry, to conceal his identity, and that he was known as Derry in a San Francisco hotel. The proprietor was wired to give Derry's description, but instead of describing Brown, it is said that the description, so far as to height and hair, tallies better with the description of that of a corpse found hung to a tree up in a mountain canyon near Nogales some days since, which was supposed to have been there a month. There appeared to be a lack of evidence of suicide. The body was hung to a limb of a tree, and the knees very nearly touched the ground. There was no clothing upon the corpse save a shirt, not a scrap of paper to be found anywhere by which to identify the corpse. It is stated that Brown had a partner named Derry. It is alleged they had been at Bisbee together; that they were last seen together in a vehicle some weeks ago, and that Derry had not been seen since. Among Brown's effects was found a large package of cancelled checks signed by Derry; also, Derry's check-book, a number of letters, and other papers of Derry's. There was also a large number of pieces of paper upon which he had been practicing writing the name of E. W. Derry, as well as other very damaging circumstantial evidence. The officers have gone to look up the discovered circumstances, as far as possible, of the remains of the man found in the mountains. A few days will disclose, it is believed, a most diabolical crime. It is to be hoped that the young man can establish his innocence. The case looks bad—very bad—for the young man.—Tucson Star.

Wherever we get the facts concerning the domestic or foreign trade of European countries, we find them very similar to those prevailing in the United States—that is to say, unprecedented activity in all lines of production, yet a demand in excess of the output caused by the fullest play of energies, says the New York financial News. The world is growing at an unprecedented rate. Heretofore the developments in our western States in the two decades following the Civil War set the record for demand and for the amount of newly created wealth. Yet the west is growing as rapidly, more rapidly to-day than twenty years ago, but its growth is spread over so much ground, in an empire filled up on the foundations laid a quarter of a century or a half century back, that we do not see the growth concentrated in the building of lines of railroad over empty prairies or the board town development that followed the laying of the roads. But in the production of crops, in the handling of merchandise, in manufacturing, mining, the output and movement of surplus, the growth is infinitely larger. The south is growing at a great pace, and a year's results on the scale of to-day doubles, triples or quadruples those of two or three decades back, as production has been greatly varied.—Record.

Buy a Prospect.

It is often the case that the development of a prospect is more profitable than the working of a producing mine. To the experienced miner this is the self-evident proposition, so palpable that its repetition is superfluous. However, there are many of the uninitiated who are anxious, more than ever at this time, to become practically interested in the industry and who are unable to properly value the distinction or measure the various degrees of difference between a prospect and a mine. A prospect may be a hole of six feet or a shaft or tunnel of 100 feet in the ground. Either may be located upon a rich but undeveloped mineral vein. The discovery thus far may, as it often does, establish the fact that it is a valuable property. But owing to the fact that the expenditure of money and labor has been but a trifle, the property is offered for sale or it may be secured under bond and lease at a nominal price regardless of its possibilities of abundant treasure. It is this phase of the mining industry in Colorado, as elsewhere, which is especially presented at this time, when there is an inquiry and search on every hand for opportunities of mining investment and all descriptions of property are in demand. For the man of small money the prospect offers the safest investment; the opportunities are numerous and the field is widespread and inviting.—Mining Reporter.

One man who claims to have out-generated the trust, says he was at the head of a small concern making, let us say, car wheels (that's not exactly it, but pretty nearly,) and about a year ago he got a private hint that the other car wheel people were arranging a combine. He said nothing, but immediately communicated with several of the largest consumers and by offering confidentially a reduction of about 15 per cent secured advance orders that would occupy him over two years to fill running at full capacity. At the price named every wheel would be made at a loss, and his partners were scared. He told them to keep their mouths shut and wait. In a few months the trust was organized according to program, and one day a bland agent dropped in and offered him a fair price for the plant. He said he didn't care to sell. The trust thereupon proceeded to cut rates, but the little wheel maker didn't seem to care. Then they made another and much larger cut which was what he was waiting for, and through a third party he instantly placed orders covering all the contracts he had made at a figure that left him a handsome margin of profit. Without suspecting that the large order came from him, the trust people, alarmed at the losses incurred in the freezing-out process, made another and much better offer for his plant, which he promptly accepted. Now the trust has the concern and is running it day and night to make wheels at 25 per cent under actual cost for the man it tried to freeze out. As fast as he gets them he turns them over to his contracts and reaps the intermediate profit, while, needless to say, the trust howls every time it makes a delivery. The little wheel maker says it is great fun to see a trust on the gridiron.—M. & S. Press.
