Albania’s Progress

Where Old Torn Replac’d Lather for Shorinaghi, in Trans-

The horse market, Albania’s sole real market, is an interesting and, it would appear, promising prospect. The horse market, being not far removed from the village, was a good place to see. There was a great deal of activity, some of it quite unusual. The horse market was a large, open area, with a few stalls and a number of people. The horses were of various breeds, and in different conditions. Some were healthy and fit, while others were thin and in need of care. The market was a lively place, with people coming and going, buying and selling. The horses were a mix of domestic and foreign breeds, and there was a great diversity of colors and sizes. The owners of the horses were mostly local farmers, and they were happy to trade and sell. The market was run by a group of men, and they were fair and honest in their dealings. The horse market was a successful and promising business, and it was a good example of how Albania can develop its resources and improve its economy.
